Charlottesville Dentist Confesses Chloroform Slaying of School Girl

Death Due to Attempted Illegal Operation, Sheriff Says.

Killer Is Removed To Richmond Jail

Crowd Causes Collapse of Police Station's Porch at Inquiry.

Picture story of slaying in Charlottesville—Page 16.

A Staff Correspondent.

Charlottesville, Va., March 4.—Dr. Richard G. Miller, 53-year-old dentist and civic leader, has confessed to the chlorform murder of Cleo Sprouse, 18-year-old high school girl, according to a telephoned message received this morning from Sheriff J. Mason Smith, of Albemarle County.

Sheriff Smith telephoned from Richmond where Dr. Miller was removed last night after a murder warrant against him had been issued by Trial Justice W. B. Coltharst at the sheriff's request. The warrant charged the stocky dentist with killing the pretty girl whose body was found near the University of Virginia campus Tuesday morning.

Criminal Operation.

It was reported by an Associated Press dispatch from Richmond that Dr. Miller entered a room at the Henrico County Jail at Richmond with three other officers and began writing on paper which the sheriff procured for him. The sheriff was quoted as saying that the girl died of an attempted criminal operation performed in a car 6 miles from this town before dark Monday night.

Smith stated, according to the Associated Press, that the dentist declared he had not been intimate with the girl, but had agreed to perform the operation with her consent. Dr. Miller was quoted as saying she died before the operation was performed. He stated, the sheriff said, that he waited until dark, returned to the town and left the body near the University of Virginia Cemetery where it was found.

The Associated Press reported Sheriff Smith told reporters as soon as the party arrived at Richmond that Dr. Miller, who had been the Sprouse family dentist for 20 years, had admitted while en route by auto from this city to the capital that he was responsible for the girl's death. The dentist was smoking a cigar and appeared calm when he arrived at Richmond.

Before Smith, Dr. Miller, a deputy sheriff and two detectives left this city last night, a crowd had gathered before the little police station while the dentist was being questioned by police. On the whole it was a good-natured group, composed largely of students from the university, but some of its members kept yelling, "how about it, sheriff?"

Alleges "Frame-Up."

As Miller stepped into the car he recognized a friend in the crowd and said:

"This is all a frame-up."

Commonwealth's Attorney W. O. Fife said that Miller was not being removed to Richmond because he fears mob violence. "We are taking him there because we are handicapped in our investigation."

The crowd in front of the station numbered more than 1,000. A portion of the front porch collapsed, but no one was hurt.

The murder warrant, Fife said, was issued at 10 p. m., after the dentist had been questioned for nearly five hours.

Fife said a car which the middle-aged man admitted to have borrowed Monday afternoon "reeked of chloroform" and contained fragments of cotton when it was returned.

Car Was Borrowed.

According to Fife, Dr. Miller borrowed the car from a friend, J. Hubert Carver, a salesman, with the understanding he would return it within an hour. He borrowed the machine at 4 p. m. and did not return it until 8 p. m., Carver said.

Carver previously had appeared voluntarily to tell police he had loaned Dr. Miller the car. Carver, who was not at any time under formal arrest, later was released.

In a statement to reporters, Fife said:

"Carver found a number of shreds of cotton in his car after Dr. Miller finished using it.

"Carver also told us that his car reeked of chloroform.

"We talked to Dr. Miller for sev-

Traffic Expert Is Given $5,000 In Safety Drive

Post Reporter Gets $500 as Prize for Articles at C. I. T. Dinner.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, March 3.—Honors for outstanding achievements in traffic safety during 1936 were awarded tonight to winners of the C. I. T. Safety Foundation's annual prize contest at a banquet in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

The grand prize of $5,000 went to Lieut. Franklin M. Kreml, member of the Evanston, Ill., Police Department and director of the Northwestern University Traffic Safety Institute.

At ceremonies broadcast over a Nation-wide radio hookup, the awards were presented by Arthur O. Dietz, president of the foundation.

Darr Praises Series.

In addition to the grand award, a check for $500 was presented to Howard F. Wentworth, Washington Post reporter, for his series of traffic safety stories appearing in The Washington Post last year.

John W. Darr, principal trustee of the C. I. T. Safety Foundation, pointed to the new traffic series in The Washington Post as showing constructive suggestions rather than pointing out traffic faults and doing nothing about them.

The District has the greatest traffic problem of any city in the Nation, he said, and The Washington Post and the articles by Howard Wentworth, started three days ago, are attempting to remedy an "almost impossible condition."

Washington, he stated, differs from other cities in that it is controlled by Congress and everything which is done must be done with Congressional approval.

This, he said, as indicated in the past, has been a distinct handicap, and The Post and Wentworth are to be congratulated on what they are doing for traffic safety education.

Recognizes Agencies.

Lieut. Kreml, a plain "cop" who joined the Evanston police department to work his way through Northwestern University, was awarded top honors for his pioneer work in developing new technique for safety education accident prevention and apprehension of hit-and-run drivers in the Evanston area. He later was called upon to establish accident prevention bureaus and traffic safety institutes in principal urban centers of the country.

In presenting the grand award to Lieut. Kreml, Dietz said:

"The grand award for 1936, fit-

Prime Minister Due Tomorrow For Trade Talk

W. L. Mackenzie King Will Be Guest of President at White House.

By the Associated Press.

Ottawa, March 3.—Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King announced late today he will visit President Roosevelt in the White House Friday in answer to an invitation from the American Executive.

"I have been invited by President Roosevelt to pay him a personal visit at the White House," he announced, "that opportunity may thereby be offered to talk over matters of mutual interest to the United States and Canada."

Nature Not Disclosed.

He said he expected to arrive Friday morning in Washington, lunch with Sir Herbert Marler, Canadian minister, and go in the afternoon to the White House, where he would spend the night.

The premier said he would return to the Canadian Legation for the remainder of the week-end and then spend a week or ten days at some point on the Atlantic Coast for rest and study of questions to come up before the imperial conference in the spring in London.

President Roosevelt invited the prime minister to be his guest in a letter of February 19, stating he had several matters he wished to discuss.

While the nature of the questions was not disclosed by the prime minister, informed sources indicated possible topics were:

1. Trade.
2. The world situation.
3. The St. Lawrence seaway project.

Explains His Trip.

Explaining his trip to the United States, the prime minister added:

"Before leaving Canada to attend the coronation ceremonies and the imperial conference, there are a number of matters which must be carefully considered.

"It is impossible to give to these matters the attention they demand without some opportunity for uninterrupted thought and study. Obviously no chance for anything of the kind is likely to present itself between now and the close of the session except by arranging to secure a few free days for the purpose.

"To gain this opportunity and at the same time to secure a rest which is much needed before attempting to meet the exacting demands of the concluding weeks of the session and those of the following weeks in London, I propose to avail myself of the time likely to be occupied in the consideration of the budget resolution to go on from Washington to some point on the Atlantic Coast for a week or ten days before returning to Ottawa."

Churches Plan Ways to Meet Nazis' Threat to Seize Lands

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 3.—Church circles, Catholic and Protestant, considered possible measures of retribution tonight if the Nazi regime fulfills its threat to expropriate church lands for resettlement.

The Catholic Church was reported in authoritative sources as prepared to denounce its concordat with the German government.

Protestant leaders hesitated to comment on the suggestion of Hans Kerrl, minister for church affairs, that "compulsory measures" might be necessary unless church lands for small settlers were surrendered voluntarily.

They were known, however, to believe the expropriation threat may have been intended as a club to be held over the church during the forthcoming Protestant Church elections and negotiations on such matters as religious education schools.

Editors of religious papers already are so restricted that discussions of issues in the free election for the Protestant General Synod are virtually impossible, church leaders pointed out. August Hermann Hinderer, the Reich culture chamber's supervisor of the evangelical press, imposed four conditions today on Protestant editors with which they must comply or face expulsion from their editorships.

"Expulsion must follow," it was decreed, "first, if Der Fuehrer's decision to inaugurate direct election of synodical delegates is criticized in any form whatsoever; secondly, if the (Nazi) party and state are dragged into the campaign through notices or comments in any form; thirdly, if election sabotage is carried on in any form, for instance, by urging non-participation in the election; and, fourthly, if the mode of procedure prescribed for the election is discussed."

Under the concordat signed July 21, 1933, Catholic leaders have sought to control spiritual training of their youths, deferring voluntarily to the state in education in civic concepts.

Menacing Canyon Walls Balk Hunt For Slide Victims

Polson, Mont., March 3 (AP).—Menacing, thaw-loosened canyon walls blocked a search tonight for the bodies of seven Polson Dam workers buried under tons of debris which cascaded into the narrow Flathead River early today.

A second slide crashed into the river while workmen struggled to reach the buried men. Three men were injured. Witnesses said they were tossed about like chips on rough water.

Roosevelt Gives Court Plea Today

President Will Break Silence on Change at 'Victory' Dinner

By Robert C. Albright.

Decision to break his recent public reticence on the Supreme Court issue, and to lash out at once in support of his judiciary reorganization proposals, was disclosed by President Roosevelt yesterday at a White House conference of Senate and House Democratic leaders.

Assuming publicly the leadership in his fight for a remodeled Supreme Court, the President planned to make first indirect reference to the court issue in his "Victory" dinner speech tonight, leaders said. Coincident with the White House conference, an attempted "band-wagon movement" for the Administration court plan was launched by the House Pennsylvania delegation.

Court "Cushion" Proposed.

Summoned to the White House for conference were Vice President Garner, Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson, Speaker William B. Bankhead and House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn.

President Roosevelt was reported to have consulted the conferees on a rough draft of his "victory dinner" speech tonight, in which it is said he will make indirect reference to the court issue, preparatory to his "fireside chat" on March 9. Although indirect, it was said the reference will be a significant stroke for the court program.

Once again the President was reported unwilling to compromise on any feature of his court plan, and holding out for approval of the full terms of his judiciary recommendations.

Meantime, a so-called "cushion" for the President's judiciary program, narrowing the field of candidates for proposed new Supreme Court justices to the 50 judgeships on the United States Circuit Courts of Appeal, was suggested in the Senate.

The "cushion" proposal was made by Senator Pat McCarran, Nevada Democrat, viewed generally as a supporter of the judiciary program, who sponsored in the Senate the recently enacted Supreme Court retirement bill. The Nevadan believes the candidate limitation would soften the charges of "politics" and "court packing" now directed at the program.

The House drive for concerted court-plan backing was inaugurated at a caucus of the 27 Democratic members of the Pennsylvania House delegation.

May Not Vote As Unit.

"It was decided," Representative Frank J. G. Dorsey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, announced, "that the delegation will support the policy of the Administration with regard to the Supreme Court."

But indication that the delegation would not vote as a "unit" for the program was given later by Representative Joseph Gray, of Pennsylvania. Gray, who recently opposed the plan in the House, said he would vote against it. "The more I think about it, the more I am against it," Gray told reporters.

Action of the House Keystone Staters was regarded as the first of what may be a series of attempted delegation commitments. Pennsylvania's House Democrats work in close harmony with Senator Joseph F. Guffey, a "100 per cent" supporter of the Administration on most issues. The delegation has a record of starting "bandwagon movements" in speakership campaigns, dating from the election of the late Speaker Joseph W. Byrns.

In the Senate, opposition and Administration lines on the court issue held firm yesterday, while leaders of both factions at informal conferences mapped plans for opening of Senate Judiciary Committee

C. I. O. Wins Conference With G. E.

Steel, Auto Unionization Campaigns Extended As Strikes Spread.

By the Associated Press.

The General Electric Corporation, with 60,000 employes, agreed yesterday to negotiate with the Committee for Industrial Organization as John L. Lewis intensified his unionization drive among the Nation's working millions.

Gerard Swope, president of General Electric, and James B. Carey, head of the United Electrical and Radio Workers of America, C. I. O. affiliate, announced a conference would be held March 15 which may affect all of General Electric's employes.

Close associates of C. I. O. Generalissimo Lewis declared the enrollment of 2,000,000 men now in his laboring force marked only the start of his movement.

Meanwhile these developments took shape in rapid-fire order:

In response to a circular letter from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor and opponent of Lewis and the C. I. O., the Cleveland Federation of Labor suspended all of its five member unions affiliated with the Committee for Industrial Organization.

Lewis lieutenants, who entered into a historic working agreement with the big Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, pointed their campaign toward other companies in that field. They claimed 200,000 steel workers were in the fold and moved to enlist the other 340,000.

The C. I. O. ally, the United Automobile Workers Union, already dealing with General Motors Corporation, demanded recognition as the sole bargaining agency for 67,000 employes of the Chrysler Motor Corporation and trained its sights on the other member of the automotive industry's "big three"—the Ford Motor Co.

Lewis' Aims Listed.

The aims of Lewis were described as embracing a new wage and hour contract for his United Mine Workers that would set a new labor standard; Nation-wide organization drives in the oil and textile industries and active recruiting in other lines; the right to 100 per cent representation of steel and automotive workers in negotiations with their employers.

The New England Council of the C. I. O. planned to merge several shoe unions into a unit to be known as the United Shoe Workers of America.

Violence cropped out at three centers as a wide range of strikes kept almost 40,000 persons idle.

A. J. Hain, managing editor of the magazine Steel, estimated that between 30,000 and 40,000 "new jobs" will be created in the nation's steel industry as a result of revised working schedules. He predicted also that the wage hikes and 40-hour week would increase the cost of production of finished steel approximately $3.25 a ton.

Murray Claim Disputed.

Philip Murray, Lewis aide, asserted the pact he negotiated with Carnegie-Illinois marked "the end of the employe representation plan in the steel industry." But the corporation issued a statement setting forth its determination to continue to deal with all spokesmen for its own employes and promising it would not limit its dealing to any exclusive group.

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor—opponent of Lewis and his plan to ignore craft divisions in bringing all workers into huge, vertical unions—termed steel's new wage-and-hour standard "definite social and economic progress."

Norris Bemoans His Loss of Face As Weather Seer

"The Lord," Senator Norris observed yesterday, looking at the Weather Bureau's forecast of one of the brightest March 4's in history today, "must have let me down. That's all I can say."

The senior Senator from Nebraska was referring to his statement on Inauguration Day, set January 20 as a result of Norris' lame-duck amendment. Chided at that time, Norris said that "you can't charge this up to me; wait until you see what kind of a day March 4 is." After he found out what kind of a day it was to be, Norris said the only course left to him now is "to think up some way to amend that weather."

Fascists' Council Moves to Increase Italy's Birth Rate

By the Associated Press.

Rome, (Thursday), March 4.—The Fascist Grand Council early today approved a sweeping seven-point program for increasing the population of the Italian nation.

The program provides that priority in employment and in promotion shall be given to fathers of large families.

A second important point is fixing salaries for families rather than for individuals, so men with families will receive larger salaries in proportion to the number of their children.

Other points of the program were announced to be:

3. Revision of laws already in effect so as to make them more effective in assuring stability of living conditions for large families.

4. Provision of loans to enable couples to marry, state assistance for dowries, insurance for young workmen.

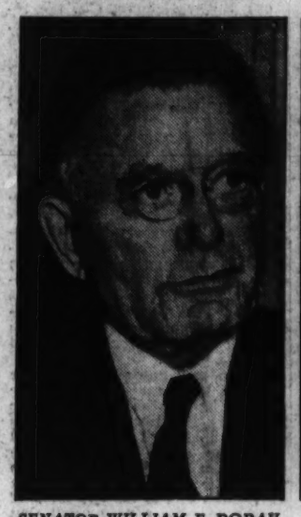
5. Formation of a national big families' association.

6. A decision to revise provincial and municipal boundaries on the basis of a census to be taken in 1941, to "suppress provinces and municipalities in which rarified and aging populations have no further need for public institutes."

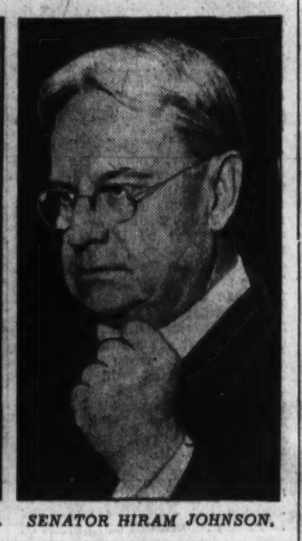
7. Establishment of a central organization for "the control and promotion of the regime's population policies."

Senate, Abandoning Freedom of the Seas, Passes Neutrality Bill

'Irreconcilables' Plead in Vain



SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH.



SENATOR HIRAM JOHNSON.

Landslide Crushes Pleas of Idahoan

Tremendous Sentiment For Isolation Policy Is Unexpected.

U. S. nationals must take oath to shun Spain—Page 2.

By Sidney Olson.

The Senate abandoned the historic American principle of "the freedom of the seas" yesterday to pass the Pittman cash-and-carry neutrality bill by a vote of 62 to 6.

Senator William E. Borah, smiling a little sadly, stood in the rear of the chamber as the majority vote rolled on to its unexpectedly crushing total. Five minutes before the tally started the Idaho Republican had made a final plea to the Senate "not to take leave of a policy as old as the American Government."

Rights of Weak Cited.

His hands gripping the desk whence he has fought for many years for a policy of American isolation, the gray-maned veteran spoke earnestly and clearly:

"Overshadowing all else in this matter is that the fact we are preparing to take leave of this old policy. We are headed for nothing less than a complete abandonment of our policy of carrying ships and foodstuffs to those who need it in wartime.

"We're contending here for the rights of small, weak peoples everywhere. We're contending for those rights without which civilization is fruitless.

"This new law does not bring peace. It brings first, contempt and then invites attack."

But the Senators set on writing into American law a permanent policy of isolationist neutrality, hastily called for the vote. Borah's final warning had been preceded, almost four hours before, by a long and detailed assault on the bill by Senator Hiram Johnson (Republican), California, Borah's partner in the 1919 defeat of President Wilson's League of Nations.

The advice of the two "Old Irreconcilables" was swept aside as the Senate heeded the cry of Senator Homer Bone (Democrat), Washington, that "we are fighting here to prevent our having again an army of dead and an army of insane by involvement in another catastrophe;" and the warning of Senator Josh Lee (Democrat), Oklahoma, expressed in a couplet:

Passage of the Pittman bill is expected to be followed by approval in the House of the pending neutrality measure sponsored in that chamber by Representative McReynolds (Democrat), Tennessee. The McReynolds bill differs from the Senate measure principally in its grant of wider discretionary power to the President in imposition of embargoes. Differences between the two bills will be ironed out in conference between committees of the two chambers.

A Flexible Provision.

Although, as Senator Borah said, freedom of the seas is traditionally an American doctrine, it has been bent to the exigencies of varying circumstance. Notably during the Civil War, the United States invented its "continuous voyage" doctrine whereby it attempted to halt transshipment of supplies to the Confederacy from Great Britain via British colonies.

This same doctrine was invoked by the British against the United States during the World War when a continuing series of seizures, searches and boardings of American vessels brought a stream of futile notes of protest.

As early as 1783, in the Revolutionary treaty of peace with England, Benjamin Franklin had attempted to insert a clause providing that "all merchants or traders with their unarmed vessels, employed in commerce. . . . shall be allowed to pass freely unmolested" in time of war, but was unsuccessful. Acceptance of this phrasing might have avoided the War of 1812, which, of course, was attributable principally to assertion of the American principle of sea freedom and resentment at England for failure to observe sanctuary of our private vessels.

Sec. Wallace Denies Charge Of Johnson

Declares George Peek Was Chief Foe of NRA, Backed by Tugwell.

By Russell Smith.

In a press conference filled with rumors of long dead New Deal civil wars, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace yesterday replied to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson's charge that he gave NRA "the kiss of Caiaphas," with the assertion that he opposed "freezing of prices in any part of our economy," and warned that legislation to succeed NRA must be flexible enough to adjust production and consumption.

Principal target of Johnsonian rhetoric in the general's blanket accusations of "interior disloyalty" within the Administration, Wallace managed also to find time at his weekly press conference to disagree with Brookings Institution's criticisms of his ever normal granary plan, to reveal the fate of future Resettlement Administration community projects is in serious jeopardy, and to discuss the President's recommendation of a .75 cent per pound sugar tax.

Saw Johnson Article.

The Secretary would not agree that he fought NRA, despite his statement on price freezing, and denied specifically that he "inspired" the report of the Committee on Industrial Analysis, transmitted to Congress Wednesday by President Roosevelt. It was this report which provoked Johnson's attack, printed yesterday in his syndicated column.

"I think it is unfair to freeze prices in one part of our economy without giving the other parts equal opportunities," Wallace said, after confessing he had glanced at Johnson's article. "On the whole, it seems to me it is better to have equal freezing.

'As a matter of fact, the man who was most violently against the NRA (of the Federal figures concerned) was George Peek. George Peek, Rex Tugwell and John Dickinson battled shoulder to shoulder against it.

"Then Gen. Johnson, Lew Douglas and the Secretary of Labor were on the other side. It just shows how funny these line-ups turn out, sometimes."

Answer to Johnson.

This presumably was in reply to Johnson's assertion that "Secretaries Roper and Perkins were in a continuous and constant conspiracy against NRA from its beginning * * * the latter because she believed that all labor problems should be remitted to her." The general's diatribe on Wallace said the latter's "idea was that before anything was

U. S. Nationals Must Sign Oath To Shun Spain

State Department Decides to Deny Passports to Those Refusing.

By Franklyn Waltman.

In an unprecedented action, taken to keep Americans out of the Spanish conflict and thus assure American neutrality, the State Department yesterday announced all citizens applying for passports must make affidavits that they do not intend to go to Spain.

Those who refuse to make such affidavits will be refused passports. The department declared that "no exceptions to this requirement have been deemed feasible," irrespective of whether the applicant for a passport wishes to engage in humanitarian work in Spain or has some other mission in mind.

Can Aid Red Cross.

Previously, the department stamped all passports issued "not good in Spain" but apparently that did not deter persons who wished to go to Spain from trying to do so. The order yesterday was prompted, it is understood, by recent organized efforts of groups in this country to recruit and send to Spain persons for military service on one side or the other and by those organizing medical units for service in the Spanish conflict.

As regards the latter, the department pointed out that those wishing to alleviate suffering in Spain should make their contributions to the American Red Cross, which in turn would forward the funds to the International Red Cross Committee, which already has medical units actively at work in Spain.

Department's Statement.

The State Department action constitutes an interesting precedent in case of another general outbreak of hostilities in Europe. During the World War, Americans were not allowed to travel in countries engaged in that conflict, but to travel on the armed merchant ships of the belligerents. The latter privilege would be outlawed under the pending neutrality bill. Now the State Department has taken what appears to be effective action to make it impossible for Americans to enter war zones in any manner. Many American Red Cross units served in the World War prior to American entry.

The State Department's statement explaining its new ruling was as follows:

"As is well known, this Government, in accordance with its established policy of the strictest nonintervention in the internal affairs

O'Connor Gets FHLB Report On Fidelity Association Today

It will be a matter of only a few days until the 18,000 depositors in the Fidelity Building & Loan Association know the fate of the closed bank, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said yesterday as it completed a study of examiners' reports and prepared to submit recommendations to the Treasury today.

The board declined to make public its recommendations until they are in the hands of the Comptroller of the Treasury, J. F. T. O'Connor, who has jurisdiction over closed banks in the District.

It is believed, however, that a plan for opening the bank will be outlined by FHLB for Treasury action. The FHLB is dedicated to the saving of closed banks wherever internal bank conditions warrant reopening. The Fidelity has been closed since last July.

Examiners who went into the books of Fidelity completed their study a fortnight ago and laid their findings before the board of directors, made up of five men, headed by Chairman John H. Fahey. Fahey's board had the report for consideration yesterday and went over the findings.

The board announced last night that it had not reached a definite conclusion and did not intimate the nature of any forthcoming recommendations. However, a spokesman for the agency said, "The board will offer constructive suggestions to the Treasury."

If Fidelity is taken into the Federal system, it will become a member of the Home Loan Bank, and will be able to borrow new capital from the central bank of this district, located at Winston-Salem.

This would not mean that depositors would receive 100 cents on the dollar for their deposits. Fidelity has sustained some losses on bad investments and these would necessitate a write-down, according to James H. Nolan, receiver. The write-down would not be "heart-breaking," Nolan said. Fidelity losses so far reported amount to $300,000, he said, out of a capitalization of $4,500,000.

"A deliberate anti-NRA propaganda diffused from Washington into the row-crop country and the wheat belt centered largely on the charge that NRA had increased the price of cotton gloves and overalls * * *" Johnson continued.

"It was among the most bold-faced and conscienceless pieces of double-crossing in my long experience in government. Talk about the kiss of Caiaphas! Lest that phrase abrade the thin veneer of Mr. Secretary a great poet is responsible, just as another great poet put 'Stout Cortez, silent on a peak in Darien.' The guy's name was Balboa."

Charges "Disloyalty."

The general wound up with the assertion that "never since the Chicago White Sox threw the 1919 world series has there been such a two-timing team as this one."

His reference was to "interior disloyalty" in the Administration.

To the "kiss of Caiaphas" charge, Wallace definitely failed to turn the other cheek, although he restricted his answer to one of philosophic calm. (Caiaphas was the high priest of the priests of Jerusalem who paid Judas 30 pieces of silver for the kiss which betrayed Christ.—Note.) And he said, in answer to a question as to the farmer and a new NRA:

"It seems to me agriculture, labor and industry have to recognize that increased production must be adjusted to increased consumption, just as is contemplated under our normal granary idea."

This was after he had gone to the rescue of the granary plan earlier in the conference, when strictures of the Brookings Institutions' report had been called to his attention. The experts who wrote the report in expressing the fear that when the Government unloaded its reserves accumulated in fat years, a hardship would be worked on farmers because their crops would be small and they would demand highest possible prices.

Wallace Disagrees.

Wallace disagreed vigorously witht his thesis:

"I think that is superficial reasoning," he said. "In 1934, Senator Dickinson made an issue of exactly the same view. The average corn price then was 75 cents, and he told the farmers that but for Government loans the year before they could have gotten a dollar a bushel. But the farmers remembered that the year before if it hadn't been for these loans, corn would have sold at, say, 25 cents, whereas they received 65.

"Furthermore, many farmers are feeders who are interested in prices not going to excessive levels. No, I don't think that argument will appeal to farmers. It might to speculators."

The Secretary readily agreed, however, with the fear also expressed by the Brookings trio that in such a circumstance political pressure from farmers might be so great as to force the Government to withhold its stored reserves from the market.

"I share fully those fears," Wallace said, "and certainly we don't want to commit another Federal Farm Board error."

L. H. Bean Testifies.

While the secretary was discussing these phases of agricultural economies at the department, two Federal experts were testifying on related problems to congressional committees. Louis H. Bean, AAA economist, told the Senate committee studying the O'Mahoney Federal incorporation bill that farmers are "vitally interested in corporate policies." He added that this is because corporations, in 1929, did 92 per cent of the processing of farm products and that "anything that tends to increase mass income tends to increase the income of farmers engaged in livestock and dairy production."

Contending that large corporations dominate farm markets, Corwin D. Edwards, Federal Trade Commission economist, told another Senate committee that the Clayton antitrust act should be amended to bar a firm marketing farm products from acquiring stock in another.

Wallace likewise touched upon corporate problems when, upon questioning as to the Federal Trade Commission report of Wednesday on agricultural income, he said:

"The farmer has no bargaining power against these big aggregations. Packers and similar processors undoubtedly are efficient, but the question is to what extent the benefits of such efficiency may be passed on to producer or consumer."

Talks of RA Plans.

Turning from these issues to RA, Wallace said that his view is that pending community projects of that agency should be completed as rapidly as possible, but that no new ones should be started until opinion within the Government is more nearly unanimous as to future policy.

"I wouldn't have had the nerve to start it," he said with reference to the RA program, "but I am glad Rex Tugwell did it.

"I think some good will come out of it, and that 50 years from now people will look back and see it as significant."

During the day Resettlement officials said that agency has written off, on the average, 25 per cent of the cost of the first dozen communities completed and turned over to local administration, but they stressed the belief costs of schools, parks and so forth should not be assessed against home owners in the projects.

In his discussion of the sugar tax, Wallace said the Jones-Costigan act clearly authorizes such a levy and reaffirmed his views that it is constitutional.

Hints on Capitol Hill of possible reduction of the .75 cent per pound tax to .5 received some confirmation in Wallace's statement that the former excise would raise about $100,000,000, whereas but $50,000,000 will be required for benefit payments.

Jones-Costigan Quota System for Controlling Sugar Prices Cost U. S. $135,000,000 in Year.

By Franklyn Waltman

IN an effort to find some subject sweeter than the President's scheme for packing the Supreme Court to make it amenable to his will, suppose we turn to Mr. Roosevelt's recent message to Congress urging continuation of the Jones-Costigan quota system for controlling sugar prices.

WALTMAN.

Like all price-fixing schemes, however they are labeled, the Jones-Costigan quota system has militated against consumers. For instance, there is evidence to sustain the contention that the people of this country paid approximately $135,000,000 more for their sugar last year than they should have—primarily because of the quota system which seeks to stabilize the supply with the demand.

But there is less justification for the sugar quota system than there is for many other price-fixing schemes. In this case the American consumer is over-charged for sugar for the benefit of a very small segment of the country's population engaging in a concededly uneconomic undertaking. There can be no doubt that efforts to produce sugar in this country in competition with Cuba and this Nation's insular possessions is uneconomic. It got a foothold back in those days when protective tariff Republicans held the reins of government and contended that this Nation should be self-sufficient—even to the extent of producing its own bananas.

President Roosevelt in his message to Congress indicates that he realizes the American consumer has been rooked out of millions of dollars in sugar prices, for he says that the quota restrictions in the new law should be safeguraded in order that the supply of sugar should not be restricted so as to create a price greater than is "reasonably necessary, together with conditional payments to producers, to maintain the domestic industry as a whole and to make the production of sugar beets and sugar cane as profitable as the production of the prinicpal other agricultural crops."

That admonition is nothing more than a gesture to pacify the consumers of the country. Surely the President knows that a quota restriction based on such a limitation is, in fact, without limitation, for the simple reason that production of sugar in this country, sufficient to meet consumer supply, can not be made "as profitable as the production of the principal other agricultural crops." This country is ideally suited to the production of wheat, corn and cotton. It is not suited to sugar production on a scale commensurate with national needs.

The evidence that the consumer—which means the entire country—has been grandly rooked under the sugar quota system is beyond dispute. By Presidential proclamation the American tariff on sugar was reduced from 2 cents to 1½ cents a pound on raw sugar, effective June 8, 1934. Under the reciprocal trade agreement with Cuba, effective September 3, 1934, the 1½ cent duty was reduced to nine-tenths of 1 cent a pound.

It is reasonable to suppose that with the duty reduced 1.10 cents a pound, a similar reduction should be reflected in the price to the consumer. But it was not. Figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics show virtually no change in average retail price of sugar in 51 large cities surveyed. This average price for 1933—the year before the reduction was made—was 5.4 cents a pound; for 1934 it was 5.6 cents; for 1935, the first full year after the reduced tariffs, it was 5.7 cents, and for last year it was 5.6 cents. Indeed, instead of the price to the consumer going down, it actually went up.

In addition, the consumer, who also is a taxpayer, lost the revenue which previously had come from the sugar tariff. The Tariff Commission in a recent estimate appearing in the hearings on that agency's appropriation bill put at approximately $70,000,000 the amount of revenue lost by the Treasury under the tariff reductions made in the reciprocal trade agreement alone.

What has happened during this period in other countries? Has the price of sugar remained stationary, or has it advanced? According to figures given by the American Sugar Refining Co., the retail price of sugar in England, translated into cents, was 4.75 cents a pound on May 1, 1933; it was 4.62 cents on May 1, 1934, and 4.65 cents on the same date in 1935—a slight decrease in the two-year period. In terms of English currency, the price on all three dates is given by the Commerce Department at 2¼ pence a pound.

There has been no change in the United Kingdom tariff on sugar since 1928. The full rate, which applies to imports from Cuba—the principal supplier—is 11 shillings 8 pence per hundredweight; the preferential rate, which applies to British dominions, is 5 shillings 10 pence per hundredweight. Translated, the British duty on Cuban sugar is about 2.6 cents a pound.

Thus—and mark this well—the British tariff rate is about three times that of the American rate and the English consumer pays approximately 1 cent a pound less for sugar than does the American housewife. Such is the way the Costigan-Jones quota system works to the detriment of consumers for a very small—but apparently very privileged—class which produces sugar.

What is the French experience. The retail price in France on May 1, 1933, was 1.79 francs per pound; on May 1, 1934, it was 1.84 francs a pound; on May 1, 1935, it was 1.61 francs a pound; on May 1, 1936, it was 1.45 francs per pound—a decrease of almost four-tenths of 1 franc per pound in the period in which the American price remained virtually stationary. Due to the extreme fluctuations in foreign exchange during the period, it is difficult to translate these figures into cents.

Meanwhile the French treasury collects more from sugar than does the American Treasury. The French impose an import duty of .47 franc a pound on sugar from Cuba and other places, other than French colonies, plus an excise tax of eight-tenths of 1 franc on all sugar—making a tax of about one-half of the total paid

Where has the approximately one cent a pound, which is the difference between the sugar price to the American and British consumer—and which is the difference between the present and former tariff rate—gone? Presumably into the pockets of the growers and refiners.

Now Mr. Roosevelt, apparently to recoup some of that money, proposes to impose an excise tax of three-quarters of a cent a pound on sugar, which, he estimates, will produce about $100,000,000 annually. This proposal would keep that money from going into the pockets of the refiners and the Cuban growers, but it is proposed to give a goodly part of that sum in the form of benefits to the American and territorial producers.

In order to carry out that proposal, it will be necessary to negotiate amendments to the Cuban reciprocal trade agreements—and, of course, the Cubans will demand an offsetting concession in some other direction. They probably will get it. This is not the first time that a handful of American sugar producers—like the tail wagging the dog—have shaped a major national policy.

Americans Must Shun Spain

of other countries, is scrupulously refraining from any interference whatsoever in the present Spanish civil strife and is making every effort to reduce the possibilities of our becoming involved in that conflict.

"The department believes that this well-recognized American policy meets with public approval throughout the country and that American citizens in general are patriotically co-operating to make the policy effective. One of the measures which have been adopted in order to give effect to our policy of impartiality is the requirement that every American applying for a passport to travel abroad shall make an affidavit that it is not his intention to go to Spain.

"No exceptions to this requirement have been deemed feasible, notwithstanding the eminence and fine character of the organization under whose auspices a person or persons may desire to go to Spain, in view of the fact that this Government has made every possible effort since the beginning of the Spanish conflict to remove Americans from Spain for the protection of their lives and is even now still engaged in this work. As is well known, this Government has even provided American naval vessels for this purpose."

Consistent With Sympathy.

"This department is, of course, deeply distressed at the great loss of human life which has resulted from the present civil strife in Spain and sympathizes with any efforts which may be made to mitigate the terrible suffering of the Spanish people. The department's policy of not issuing passports valid for Spain is in no way inconsistent with this feeling of sympathy and does not preclude any persons from rendering humanitarian aid to the Spanish people without the presence of Americans in Spain.

"The American Red Cross Society is not sending either personnel or equipment to Spain but is assisting in relief work in Spain by the contribution of funds to the International Red Cross Committee. This committee which has a mandate from all the Red Cross societies of the world to represent them in rendering humanitarian aid in cases of civil war, has already sent delegations to supervise the relief of human suffering in Spain. The delegates of the committee are stationed at present in Madrid, Valencia, Barcelona, Alicante, Bilbao, Santander, Burgos, Seville and Saragossa.

"The American Red Cross Society will undoubtedly be glad to receive contributions to be sent to the International Red Cross Committee for the purchase of medical supplies to be used by that impartial organization for hospitalization work in Spain.

"Up to January 2, 1937, the latest date for which figures are available, the committee had been able to purchase and sent Red Cross societies and private individuals medical and pharmaceutical supplies, motor ambulances, etc., to the value of Swiss francs 289,924. The committee has also forwarded to Spain substantial donations of various kinds, including children's clothing, other clothing, medical and surgical supplies, blankets and dressing materials, and cases of condensed milk."

Bankrupt Worth Million.

New York, March 3 (AP).—The assertion that Archie M. Andrews, former head of the Hupp Motor Car Corporation and at one time reported worth $50,000,000, is still worth "in excess of $1,000,000" was made today at a hearing in bankruptcy proceedings before Federal Judge Murray Hulbert today.

Senate Passes Neutrality Bill By Heavy Vote

war, in the London conference after the Crimean War, in which the United States participated, and on numerous other occasions, the policy has figured large in American aims in international policy.

Summary of Bill.

The six who lined up against the Pittman bill on the final vote were Austin (Republican), Vermont; Bridges (Republican), New Jersey; Gerry (Democrat), Rhode Island; Lodge (Republican), New Hampshire, and Borah and Johnson. Paired against the bill were Senators King, Utah, and Copeland, New York, both Democrats, and Gibson (Republican), Vermont.

The bill, designated in an amendment as "the peace act of 1937," was sent to the House, where a similar measure, sponsored by Representative Sam D. Reynolds (Democrat), Tennessee, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, is already in the legislative mill.

The measure, summarized, provides as follows:

That the President may proclaim an arms embargo on the finding of a state of war among foreign countries or in cases of civil war;

That after the proclamation of a state of foreign war, the President, at his discretion, may proclaim a further embargo on shipments of such other materials as he considers likely to endanger American neutrality;

That, following such a discretionary proclamation, a mandatory provision immediately becomes law which makes all shipments of any materials whatever to belligerents in American vessels unlawful unless paid for in cash in this country previously.

An amendment accepted yesterday by the Senate, proposed by Senator Bone, adds to the above a provision for complete assumption of risk by the shipowner.

Authority Extended.

After the President has proclaimed a state of war to exist in other countries, American citizens may not buy, sell or exchange foreign securities, make foreign loans or extend credit to foreign countries, except in Presidential discretion as to ordinary peacetime commercial credits and short-time loans.

The act is not to apply to American republics at war unless a non-American foreign country is involved.

The President may ban from American ports and territorial waters submarines or armed merchant vessels of foreign countries.

After a finding of war abroad, American citizens may not travel on ships or airplanes of belligerents.

After such a war proclamation, American merchant vessels may not carry any armament other than officers' small arms.

The amendments turned down by the Senate included one by Senator Borah which would have given the President discretion on the cash provision (now made immediately mandatory), as well as on the carry provision. This lost, 81 to 44.

Another, by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, aimed at exactly the opposite—to make the carry provision mandatory, instead of discretionary—lost, 24 to 48.

Senator Johnson, speaking in a quiet, tired voice that scarcely carried to the galleries, and sometimes lapsing so as to be entirely inaudible, said:

"The joint resolution is an attempt by a policy of 'scuttle and run' to take the profits out of war and shirk the responsibility. We take the profits and then hide ourselves because somebody else has to take the risk.

Resentment Seen.

"It will not keep us out of war, because it will arouse the bitterest kind of resentment in all belligerents except the ones strong enough to obtain our raw materials, and that resentment will be biding its time and will not be forgotten in a generation.

"Moreover the discretion given to the President is in the last analysis a discretion to declare war, and thus Congress is proposing to abdicate its last and most important function, the power to make war.

"Further, this bill makes us allies of Great Britain in the Atlantic and of Japan in the Pacific.

"Senators, if you pass this joint resolution, the day will come when you will rue it. You will rue it because you will take part in every war that is held, and every war that comes in the days to come, and you will take the part of the greatest power that is engaged in that war.

"Scuttle, Run Policy."

"In taking that part you play not the part of Americans, but as Mr. Baruch stated it, you play the part of 'scuttle and run.'

"This is a British measure, after all.

"I know it is of little use to talk of the traditions of America or of what they have meant. I have passed the proscribed age, so I feel I am at liberty to do so, but I know that to do so leaves one in a situation where it will be said he thinks in terms of years ago.

"But when America was little, when we had naught to think of but our own advancement, we took our stand on this question; we maintained that stand from that day until recent years; we never have indicated that we had altered our position—but now that we have become flabby and great, we are to do—what? We are to send other people upon the seas with their vessels filled with our goods; then like hypocrites we will stand aside and take none of the blame or responsibility."

Michigan House Urges Court Reform Approval

Lansing, Mich., March 3 (AP).—The Michigan House of Representatives, dividing along party lines, adopted today a resolution urging Congress to approve President Roosevelt's plan for reorganizing the Federal judiciary.

hearings on the plan next Wednesday. A long list of invitations to educators, lawyers, farm and labor leaders was sent out by the opposition, which plans to put its witnesses on the stand beginning March 15. Proponents will lead off March 9 with Attorney General Homer S. Cummings and Robert H. Jackson, assistant to the Attorney General. Every alternate three days will be allotted to the opposition witnesses.

Interest was keyed to the President's remarks tonight before the Democratic "Victory Dinner," when he is expected to lay a foundation for the Nation-wide fireside chat he will deliver March 9, on the eve of Senate hearings. Since his court message to Congress the President has had little to say publicly on the judiciary controversy. Opponents of the court plan may soft-pedal their grievances at the various victory celebrations.

In suggesting his "cushion" for the President's plan, Senator McCarran said he did not know whether it would be acceptable either to the Administration or to the opposition, but it had been "discussed" around the Senate. He said he was considering offering it as an amendment when and if the court plan came to the Senate floor.

The proposal would limit the President, in appointing the six proposed new justices, to judges serving on the various circuit courts of appeal. At least two of their number, Judge Learned Hand, of New York, and Judge Florence E. Allen, of Columbus, Ohio, already have been mentioned as possible high court material, and many others are highly regarded.

There are three vacancies in circuit courts of appeal which the President has yet to fill.

McCarran declared there are many advantages in his plan, not the least of which were the judicial background of the candidates and the absence of political considerations.

Sees Nonpartisan Judiciary.

"You'd get a trained and experienced judiciary, removed by their tenure of office from distracting influences," said the Nevada Democrat. "When a man has been on the bench for some time he is not likely to be affected by partison matters. We have many able and learned judges in these courts that would serve as a broad nucleus for appointments to the court."

Laying a foundation for opposition testimony at Senate hearings on the President's plan, Senators Frederick Van Nuys, of Indiana, and Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, for several days have been consulting Senators known to oppose the plan on a select choice of witnesses.

Several invitations already have been sent out, but the list will not be made public until acceptances are received. It is said that L. J. Taber, of the National Grange, and E. H. Everson, of the Farmers' Union, who have expressed opposition to the plan, will be called. Chairman Henry F. Ashurst, of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has indicated there will be no time limitation on hearings.

The Senate opposition bloc is holding daily conferences on a strictly informal basis, and it is understood that no effort will be made to organize formally.

Lamneck Condemns Plan.

The stream of radio oratory continued last night, with Representative Arthur P. Lamneck (Democrat), Ohio, attacking the judiciary program and alleged efforts "to becloud the issue by injecting politics." He said Congress should not "fritter away for a momentary good the hard-won values of centuries of endeavor."

"Since the almost total surrender by Congress of its power to the Executive, the Supreme Court remains the last bulwark of the people's rights," said Lamneck. "I do not believe that Franklin Roosevelt has dictatorial ambitions; but we must remember that the term of Presidents is limited and that some other man in the White House might use the combined executive-legislative-judicial power to the detriment of the people and not to their advantage."

Labor's Non-Partisan League, which will hold a national convention here March 8 to muster support for the President's plan, announced last night that Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr. (Progressive), Wisconsin, enthusiastic proponent of the court plan, will address the meeting.

Senator Couzens Left $31,000,000

Detroit, March 3 (AP).—The estate of the late United States Senator James Couzens, of Michigan, was valued at $31,000,000 in an inventory filed with the Wayne probate court today by Clarence E. Wilcox, attorney.

Couzens died last October 22 without leaving a will. Under Michigan law the widow receives one-third of the estate, and each of four children one-sixth.

District Plans Rigid Measures To Reduce High Traffic Toll

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

City Commissioners Will Wage Relentless War on Willful Violators; Speeders Will Get No Mercy in Courts.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

(Winner of first prize in the Nation-wide C. I. T. Safety Contest with his 1936 series appearing in The Post.)

No. 4 of a Series

Two important steps for traffic safety were taken yesterday.

The District Commissioners promised that "the small group of deliberate and willful violators of traffic safety measures will be vigorously handled by the police and the courts."

The Commissioners, who issued a formal proclamation, also took steps to make every District employe an example to the rest of the city's residents.

They asked all department heads and subordinates to impress on all workers that "every employe of the District is expected to co-operate and to set an example by observing all regulations, both as a pedestrian and as a motor vehicle driver, and especially when crossing streets on the proper signal and not between intersections."

Said Judge McMahon from the bench in Traffic Court:

"The way the traffic death rate is going up here, any speed over the legal limit can contribute toward serious accidents."

The Commissioners' proclamation pointed out that 19 of the 23 pedestrians who were fatally injured on District streets in the first two months of this year had disregarded safety rules.

The proclamation added:

"The Commissioners believe the time has arrived when the residents of the municipality should have their attenton specially drawn to the hazards to life and limb that are natural consequences of a disregard of traffic signals and lights and traffic regulations.

"We ask from all law-abiding citizens their thoughtful and serious co-operation in an effort to put a stop to the unnecessary killing on our local highways. The small group of deliberate and willful violators of traffic safety measures will be vigorously handled by the police and the courts.

"The Commissioners urge all residents to inform themselves of the traffic regulations and to discard all traffic practices which are unsafe to themselves or others."

Judge McMahon, in refusing to extend clemency to several speeders, indicated that the policy adopted last month by Judge Isaac R. Hitt, who refused to punish speeders unless they exceeded 30 miles an hour, would be set aside.

Anticipating a growing demand for instructors in driver education and training, as the national effort to train drivers gains momentum, the American Automobile Association is co-operating with the School of Education of George Washington University in offering the initial teacher-training course in the National Capital.

The course, which begins Monday and continues through Saturday, will be in charge of Dr. F. R. Noffsinger and Prof. Amos E. Neyhart, AAA driver training specialists. Both men are widely experienced in the field of educating and training of skillful drivers.

Registration for the course, for which there is no tuition charge, will take place today and tomorrow between 4 and 7 p. m., and on Saturday between 11 a. m. and 1 p. m., at the offices of the university, building F, room 21, Twentieth and G streets northwest.

This course in Traffic Safety Education is intended primarily for those who are interested in teaching traffic, safety and driving, which is now being introduced as an accredited course in many high schools, among them the schools in the District of Columbia.

Tax Increase Opposed.

Petitions signed by 5,000 District motorists protesting against proposals to increase the local gasoline tax were laid before the Commissioners yesterday by a delegation representing the A. A. A. District of Columbia Motor Club's advisory board.

A. W. Lee, chairman of the delegation, told Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen that only 800 ballots approving the proposed tax increase had been received by the motor club in its poll of public opinion on the subject.

tingly enough, recognizes the important place held by proper law enforcement agencies. Where scientific methods can be adopted and law enforcement agencies trained for their task, the result will be two-fold. First, rigid enforcement of sound traffic regulations; second, a greater respect for, and co-operation on the part of the public with those responsible for enforcement."

Lieut. Kreml was selected for the grand prize by a jury consisting of Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the United States Bureau of Public Roads; Norman Damon, manager of the safety division of the Automobile Manufacturers Association, and Arthur Hays Sulzberger, publisher of the New York Times.

Responsible for Improvement.

Wentworth's series of stories in The Washington Post was deemed greatly responsible for the reduction of traffic deaths in the Federal Capital during 1936.

Speakers from Washington included MacDonald and Burton W. Marsh, safety educational director of the American Automobile Association. Both said they were gratified that Washington was represented and that The Post was the one to receive the representation.

The committee of judges issued this statement regarding their choice for the $5,000 grand prize:

"Lieut. Kreml, through his work in the uniformed force in the City of Evanston, Ill., lowered the rate of fatalities in that city over the course of the last nine years from 21.8 to 2.9 per 100,000 population."

Reduced Traffic Fatalities.

"It was Lieut. Kreml who developed the system for accurately recording the causes of accidents with the consequent result that responsibility is placed and when a violator of traffic regulations is disclosed he is punished. The information gathered by this system is used for the correction of physical conditions responsible for accidents, as well as for the education of motorists and pedestrians, law enforcement officers and students of traffic problems. Both through the written word and his subsequent work at Northwestern University and other schools, he has impressed the general public, and has successfully imparted the technique which he has developed to officers of 35 States and 43 cities, thereby giving his work a national importance and value.

"During 1936 he has personally installed traffic bureaus in 9 cities—for which records now available indicate a substantial reduction in accident fatalities, ranging from 10 per cent to 33 per cent.

"The immediate possibilities of accident reduction through rigorous and intelligent law enforcement are plainly indicated by Lieut. Kreml's work."

The C. I. T. Foundation was set up by the C. I. T. Corporation, a national installment sales finance company which finances automobile sales. The foundation was established with a yearly grant of $50,000 to promote and popularize individual safe driving habits by giving awards to individuals doing outstanding safety work.

Assault Slaying Of Baby Girl, 4, Jails Father

Man of 26 Admits Attacking Child Visiting His Home; Woman Held.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 3.—Two men and a woman were in jail tonight as a result of the death of 4-year-old Joan Morvan, who succumbed to the effects of a criminal assault.

Howard Magnussen, 26, of Huntington Station, Long Island, was charged with murder after Police Inspector Joseph Donovan said he admitted ravishing the girl while she was a week-end visitor at his home Sunday.

The child's father, George Morvan, 24, of Jamaica, Queens, was held with his housekeeper, Mrs. Norma Gatto, on charges of beating the girl with a hairbrush.

Mrs. Gatto, a 25-year-old divorcee, is a sister of Magnussen. Neither she nor Morvan was implicated directly in the child's death, but authorities preferred felonious assault charges against them on the testimony of neighbors who said the girl had been frequently beaten.

Arraigned in Queens Felony Court, they were held in $100,000 bail each for pleading March 10.

Magnussen was taken to Suffolk County and arraigned before Justice of the Peace John C. Toaz at Huntington Town Hall. A crowd gathered outside, but there was no demonstration.

When he was asked in the line-up at New York police headquarters why he attacked the child, Magnussen, a slight youth weighing about 110 pounds, blinked his eyes and replied:

"I don't know."

Investigators accused him of assaulting the girl in a second floor bedroom at the home of his parents in Huntington Station. She and a 2½-year-old brother, George, had been taken there by Morvan and Mrs. Gatto for a visit with the latter's relatives.

They returned home to Jamaica that night, and the next day, Monday, the child became seriously ill and was put to bed. When her father returned from a house painting job she was dead.

Police listed the case as accidental after Mrs. Gatto told them the child had fallen downstairs. Assistant Medical Examiner Howard W. Neail performed an autopsy, however, and announced the child had been subjected to violent mistreatment.

Wirephoto: Held in Slaying of 4-Year-Old Child

Williams Upholds Securities He Sold

Harrison Williams told the Securities Commission yesterday he has a clear conscience concerning stocks sold to one of his investment trusts by another Williams-controlled company which sponsored it.

The utilities man was testifying in the commission's investigation to determine whether legislation is needed to regulate investment trusts.

Commission counsel contended that, when sponsors organized investment trusts—as Williams had American Cities Power & Light Co. and Electric Shareholding Co.—it was an easy matter to unload "sour" stocks in the process.

Farnsworth Term In Atlanta Prison Ordered by U. S.

John S. Farnsworth, former lieutenant commander in the Navy, will serve his 4-to-12-year sentence at Atlanta, the Department of Justice decided. Accused of selling confidential naval secrets to the Japanese government, Farnsworth first pleaded "nolo contendere" and then sought to change his plea and stand trial.

Justice James M. Proctor refused to permit the one-time debonair officer to change his plea and insisted that the original statement stand. With Farnsworth on the trip went Frank H. Acton, small-time racketeer, who was convicted of manslaughter for the slaying of Donald E. Mursch in an argument over a debt.

Capital Boy Worried Over What Dad Will Say About Runaway.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Palatka, Fla., March 3.—Little Jimmy Brady, counting the minutes until Friday morning when he will be permitted to watch the training of the Washington Senators at Orlando, confessed himself "a little bit worried" today.

The lad who ran away from his home in Washington and left parents praying that police lookouts broadcast throughout the East would intercept Jimmy today learned that his secret expedition was not in vain.

His father, James Brady, sr., solicitor of the U. S. Veterans Bureau, who is motoring here with Mrs. Brady and the lad's sister, has agreed that Jimmy may watch the Senators practice for a few days.

But here at Palatka where Jimmy was taken in charge by Howard Rowton, a friend of his family, after police apprehended him alighting from a train in Orlando, young Mr. Brady was not thoroughly at ease despite the knowledge that he would be returned to Orlando.

It was hard for Jimmy to get excited about the beauteous azalea plants of which Palatka is very proud, and he was not overly impressed either by the orange groves and cypress gardens.

He was thinking about the Senators training at Orlando, and he was thinking, too, about what dad would say when he arrived here.

"I'm not really scared about dad," said the chubby, black haired lad who is still wearing the corduray breeches and wind-breaker with which he set out on his run-away trip, "but I'm just wondering what he's going to say. I guess he won't like what I did much. But he's a good fellow, dad is—I hope."

Little Jimmie can have the satisfaction, though of creating a family vacation for the Bradys who have resolved to make their retrieving expedition an outing.

Loyalists Take City of Toledo, Fight in Streets

Government Troops Batter Way Into Town 41 Miles South of Madrid.

Madrid, March 3 (AP).—Government forces were reported today to have re-entered the City of Toledo, whence they were driven more than five months ago and to be engaged in heavy street fighting with the insurgent army of Gen. Francisco Franco.

The newspaper Claridad related that the government army along the Tagus River had battered its way into the city, 41 miles south of the capital.

The reports were unconfirmed by official quarters, but caused a sensation throughout Madrid. A large government force was known for weeks to have been occupying positions close to Toledo, but reports of its activities were withheld.

Information Refused.

Gen. Jose Miaja, military defense director, declared he had no news to give out about the situation at Toledo, where occurred the 72-day siege of Alcazar Fortress, ended September 27, when Franco troops drove off government besiegers.

Claridad said the troops forced entry into the city after pounding an outlying suburban quarter for hours with artillery posted atop Los Cigarales Hill.

The newspaper asserted that after severe fighting, government troops gained possession of one whole outlying quarter near the Alcazar and that street fighting was extending.

Talavera Shelled.

It reported further that troops from south of the Tagus had crossed the river near Talavera de la Reina and were shelling that city, which is an important insurgent concentration point.

Fog and rain over the Madrid area failed to prevent insurgents from cannonading the city today. A number of shells fell in residential districts, causing some casualties among the civilian population.

The disagreeable weather hampered insurgent activity on the Jarama front, where after a day and night of struggle, Gen. Miaja announced his troops were holding their lines.

Hitler's Program Lauded.

Berlin, March 3 (U.P.).—German legal experts tonight gave judicial blessing to Chancellor Adolph Hitler's campaign for bigger and better babies by drafting a code designed to aid pregnant women, punish those who scoff at motherhood, and stamp out adultery.

A first draft of the code increases prison terms for adulterers and corespondents from six months to a maximum of 10 years.

Birth Control Assailed.

London, March 3 (AP).—The Bishop of London, assailing "miserable propaganda for birth control," asserted today a larger population would solve the problem of railroad deficits.

Recently returned from Canada, the bishop told the House of Lords in debate on the empire settlement bill, he had found railroads there that could not pay their own way without a larger population as potential patrons. He said he agreed fully with a railroad official who told him, "What we want is 10,000,000 more Britishers."

Petroleum Heads Deny Sherman Act Violations

Madison, Wis., March 3 (AP).—Several presidents and 50 other officials of some of the Nation's largest oil companies appeared before Federal Judge Patrick T. Stone today and pleaded innocent to charges of violating the Sherman antitrust act.

Ten of the 67 individual defendants were excused. The indictment charges the 67 had conspired through buying pools to raise gasoline prices and had exacted large sums from oil jobbers in ten Midwestern States by signing them to long-term contracts and fixing their margin of profits.

Court Asks Arguments On Frazier-Lemke Act

By the Associated Press.

The Supreme Court called yesterday for arguments on constitutionality of the revised Frazier-Lemke act, granting a three-year moratorium on farm mortgage foreclosures.

Two years ago the tribunal unanimously declared unconstitutional a similar law for a five-year moratorium. The court declared the measure deprived creditors of property rights without due process of law.

TAKE WEIGHT OFF TIRED FEET

Lose Fat The Easy Way—Without Starvation Diets, or Back-Breaking, Reducing and Rolling Exercises.

If your feet and ankles feel tired and ache all over—because you are carrying too much fat—do something about it. Try the treatment that has helped millions to reduce excess weight.

There's a reason why so many people find dieting slow and often times futile in reducing. The reason, doctors say, is often because a little gland is not working right.

All the blood in your body goes through this tiny gland sixteen times every day. If it doesn't pour into the blood stream about one and one-half drops of vital fluid every 24 hours, many people take on ugly fat. This fluid helps Nature to "burn up" excess food and fatty tissue in much the same way as a speed "draft" acts in a furnace.

Now, physicians combat this condition by feeding this gland the substance it lacks—and millions of pounds of excess fat has been taken off in this way.

Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on the same method used by doctors. So don't waste your time or money striving to reduce with starvation diets or back-breaking exercise. Start the Marmola treatment today (full directions here and confidently to get rid of excess fat. The formula is in every box of it. You know just what you are taking. Don't wait—get a box of Marmola today from your druggist.

Mother Slayer In Soviet Given Term in Prison

Friend Also Is Sentenced in 'Loeb-Leopold' Case of Reds.

By the United Press.

Moscow, March 3.—Valdemar Lintin, pampered son of a high Soviet official, and his "dream friend," Victor Sokolov, tonight were sentenced to a labor camp in Siberian wilds for the murder of Lintin's mother—Soviet Russia's "Loeb-Leopold case."

The trial, which might have been just another item on the police blotter except for the psychological interest in the two cultured young defendants, stirred comment throughout Russia.

Public Prosecutor Volkov, who demanded rigorous punishment of the two young men, urged their exile to Siberia, "where they may be regenerated into the ranks of wonderful Soviet youth."

Valdemar, 16-year-old son of Karl Lintin, a supreme court judge, was leader of the pair, a "mother's darling," who would wear nothing but silk shirts and demanded his bed linen be changed daily.

His sycophant, Sokolov, shared his dreams—imaginative fantasies of American gangsters, international spies and intrigue—as Chicago's Nathan Leopold shared the ideas of his "dream king," Dick Loeb.

The pair planned to steal valuable Soviet military secrets, escape to Germany and sell them. Then they intended—according to the prosecutor's story to the court—to go to America, where they would become famous and rich as gangsters.

Last September they packed their clothes and prepared to leave. Valdemar's mother learned of their desire to fleet from Russia, and tried to dissuade them.

Valdemar stabbed her, then grabbed a hammer from his chum and beat her on the head, crushing her skull. They placed the body in a bathtub and set out for Tashkent, in Central Asia.

Police traced them and brought them back three months later.

D'Annunzio, Near 74, Ailing, Stirs Italy With Suicide Hint

'Disdaining to Die in Agony Between Two Sheets, I Am Trying My Latest Invention,' Writes Poet-Hero to Fascist Official.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, March 3.—Bald, fiery Gabriele D'Annunzio, poet-hero of the siege of Fiume, stirred Italy today with dramatic hints of self-destruction "disdaining to die in agony between two sheets."

"I am old and ill so I am hastening my end," wrote the aging warrior who will be 74 on March 12. His letter, written to Lieut. Gen. Achille Starace, secretary of the Fascist Party, was published in a Rome newspaper.

But it was not the first time colorful D'Annunzio, who defied Europe for 15 months after seizing Fiume in 1919, had threatened to kill himself.

Italy was moved with anxiety and speculation, however, by the letter to Starace, saying:

"My very dear Achille of the young heart: I am now old and ill so I am hastening my end. It was forbidden me to die in wiping out Ragusa (referring to his World War aerial attack on the Adriatic seaport, now part of Jugoslavia). Disdaining to die in agony between two sheets, I am trying my latest invention."

Starace declared that D'Annunzio, who lost an eye during World War service that brought him many decorations, was in reasonably good health Sunday and was able to walk about his villa at Gardone Riviera, beside a north Italian lake.

His "latest invention" possibly referred to some new method of dying, said Senator Alfredo Felici, D'Annunzio's attorney, recalling the title of D'Annunzio's latest book was "A Hundred and a Hundred and a Hundred and a Hundred Pages From the Secret Book of Gabriele D'Annunzio, Attempter of Death."

Jefferson Funds For Forests Asked

The money to be spent for the proposed $3,000,000 Thomas Jefferson Memorial in the Tidal Basin might better be used to set up a Jefferson Memorial Soil Restoration Commission that could begin work at once on plans for soil and forest restoration in the area Jefferson purchased, Russell T. Edwards, editor of the Forestry New Digest, said in a talk before the Rotary Club yesterday.

His speech was made at the luncheon gathering of the group at the Willard Hotel.

"Every idle man in the United States can be put to work for the next 25 years on such a memorial to Thomas Jefferson that would include all forms of soil restoration," said Edwards.

More effective means of controlling the deadly Dutch elm disease which threatens the elm trees of the Nation will be discussed today at the first general meeting of the National conference on Dutch elm disease here. The sessions will be held at the Mayflower Hotel, beginning this morning at 10 o'clock.

The program will include reports on the progress of control work in the three States now most seriously affected—New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

Principal reports will be given by Lee Strong, of the Department of Agriculture; L. H. Warthley, of the Department of Agriculture; F. C. Craighead, of the same bureau and R. Kent Beattie, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, who will picture the elm disease situation in Europe.

Britain Decides On 14-In. Guns Despite Japan

Greatest Peacetime Naval Program Is Announced From London.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 3.—Content to equip three new battleships with 14-inch guns "irrespective of what Japan decides," Britain announced today her greatest peacetime naval building program—with a concurrent increase in taxes.

Appropriations for 80 warships, large and small, with a tremendous boost in moneys to complete vessels now under construction accounted for virtually all of a $118,880,000 increase over the current fiscal year's naval expenditures, submitted to Commons for approval today.

The naval share in Britain's rearmament program will be $525,325,000, the admiralty announced. Of this, $390,325,000 would be raised in additional taxation; $135,000,000 would come from Britain's new $2,000,000,000 defense loan.

The admiralty for a time had considered placing 16-inch guns on the three battleships included in the program, in the event Japan refused to accept the 1936 London Treaty fixing a 14-inch maximum.

Finally, admiralty spokesmen said, it was decided the smaller gun would be better suited to fighting in the narrow seas around Britain.

By 1941 or 1942 Britain will have five super-modern battleships. The four-year plan calls for 275,000 tons of new vessels, including two aircraft carriers with a combined tonnage of 46,000; cruisers, destroyers, submarines and miscellaneous craft.

Along with the construction program, Sir Samuel Hoare, first lord of the admiralty, told Commons that 11,000 officers and men would be added to bring the naval force to 112,000.

Police Destroy Tree at Scene Of Boy's Death

'Whole Truth' in Alexandria Hanging Is Promised on Saturday.

As Alexandria police promised to reveal "the whole truth" of the Luther Cummins mystery death at a coroner's inquest Saturday, they admitted yesterday that their investigations were at a standstill.

They hope to extract from 20 witnesses who have given contradictory testimony concerning the death and disappearance of the youth, admissions of lies, or at least revised accounts of what happened. From the total testimony they hope to piece together a straight story which will give some logical explanation of the mystery.

Meanwhile it was learned last night that police had built a fire in the heart of a clump of trees where the dead boy's skeleton was found last Saturday in a swamp. Detectives who went back to the scene with rakes to search for new clews were confronted with a pile of wood ashes. Police took no pictures of the scene.

Says Police Burned Tree.

The fire was built by policemen who became cold. James E. Bracey, neighbor who lives 100 yards from the scene and who was on the spot a few minutes after the skeleton was found, said yesterday a 4-inch section of dead tree which projected across the clump was missing yesterday, burned up by policemen.

Alexandria authorities have contended the boy died either accidentally while swinging from a rope on one of the trees or hanged himself and fell sideways into the tree forks. Bracey indicated the missing length of deadwood was directly across the line of fall and might have prevented the boy from landing in the position in which the skeleton was found, if he did as police believe.

Capt. John S. Arnold, of the Alexandria force, said yesterday:

"There have been a lot of lies told in this investigation. Our informants have directly contradicted each other on very important matters. They have, in fact, contradicted themselves at various times.

Hopes to Get "Truth"

"We expect to get considerable new information from people who have so far declined to talk. We also expect to get some of the witnesses to admit they gave us falsehoods. Perhaps out of all the testimony Saturday we can arrive at the truth."

Several of the neighbors who joined in the search last July 16, when Luther vanished from his front porch, have been withholding important information, according to Detective Lieut. Edgar Sims, who said last night these witnesses told him one story last summer and different stories this week.

"Neighbors told me things last summer," he said, "which would indicate a motive for suicide. These people have since apparently reconsidered what they told me then and decided to keep quiet. When we get them on the witness stand under oath, a different picture will be seen from the one we see now."

Meanwhile, Luther's father, Franklin D. Cummins, clung tenaciously to his "positive" belief that his son was not in the woods last summer, as police contend. Cummins reiterated yesterday that the lad was not there when 300 searchers scoured the small swamp, aided by Boy Scouts, police, firemen and bloodhounds.

Commonwealth's Attorney Albert V. Bryan said yesterday he would be present at the inquest in order to assure the State a thorough quizzing of all witnesses.

WE ENTER OUR SECOND CENTURY!

ON MARCH 3, 1837 The Firemen's Insurance Company of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, received it's charter approved and signed by Andrew Jackson, retiring President of the United States. In addition to President Jackson's signature, James K. Polk, the 11th President's name, also appears while five other Presidents—Franklin, Pierce, Andrew Johnson, Grover Cleveland, William Howard Taft and Herbert Hoover have approved the various changes that have been enacted during the years in the provisions regulating the Company.

Those who founded this Company a century ago had the vision of the true pioneers. Washington, including Georgetown, was a struggling town of only 30,000 people. Much of the property now in the down-town section was regarded as suburban and there were only about 4,000 homes and dwellings standing, mostly of frame construction.

The beginning of the Firemen's Insurance Company under these conditions was most opportune, and the founders were not slow to take advantage of the situation and build soundly and well. The ensuing years were busy ones . . . years in which the best brains and energy possible were commandeered for the purpose of developing the Company along high and ethical lines. Many of Washington's first citizens have served as officers or directors of the Firemen's while the roster of the original stockholders reads like a "Who's Who" in the Nation's Capital.

So on this, the completion of our 100th year of business we stand proudly on the threshold of another century. Toward those who have allowed us to serve them in years of long ago we feel the utmost reverence. To those loyal friends who today occupy honored places on our ledgers we extend our appreciation and good wishes. It is the sincere hope of all of us, officers, directors, employees and stockholders, that the coming years will only cement closer the ties that hold us to a glorious heritage.

Taxi Ceremony Ruled Invalid, Cadet Is Saved

War Department Discovers Marriage of West Pointer Is Void.

A marriage that was not a marriage, contracted by a West Point cadet and his sweetheart here Inaugural night when the young soldier was on brief leave after marching in the parade, was brought to light yesterday when it was learned that the War Department's generals had decided they couldn't accept his resignation from "The Point."

Army officers closely guarded the names of the principals—the cadet and the girl, believed to live in Washington. They explained the boy was now in good standing at the Academy, following investigation of the "marriage" January 20.

Officers similarly refused to press investigation of an unidentified taxi driver, who told the couple they could be married without a license, and that a "friend" of his would perform the ceremony. Local police last night said they had no knowledge of the taxi driver or his friend, and had not yet been asked to investigate.

Marched in Parade.

According to reports—neither officially confirmed or denied by the War Department—the couple were married while the cadet was in Washington to march in the Inaugural parade. Following the ceremony, the "husband and wife" regretted their haste, the bride immediately returning to her hotel, the groom to his fellow West Pointers ready to leave for the Academy.

The girl is reported to have gone to Florida immediately afterward, where she now is vacationing with her parents.

West Point officials began investigation of the case when the cadet turned in his resignation, in line with the Academy rule that cadets must remain unmarried. A check in Washington revealed no marriage license had been issued to the couple, and Army officers questioned the cadet as to the validity of the ceremony.

Ceremony Invalid.

His story, it is reliably stated, was that he and the girl had been engaged for some time and, acting on impulse, asked a taxi driver as to who could marry them without a license. He took them to a pleace near Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue, where a "friend" performed the ceremony, giving part of the fee to the cab driver.

When the case was brought to the attention of War Department officials they considered for sometime before deciding the ceremony was invalid. It was suggested that it might be legal, since both parties believed the ceremony was bona-fide. Later the Judge Advocate General's office ruled there had been no actual marriage and the resignation should not be accepted.

Rumors that Department of Justice operatives or local police had been called in to apprehend the taxi driver and his friend were denied last night by Army officials. They contended that the case has been officially settled and are no longer interested.

Senate in California Opposes Court Plan

Sacramento, Calif., March 3 (AP).—The Republican-controlled State Senate adopted a resolution today asking Congress to reject President Roosevelt's proposal to reorganize the Supreme Court.

The vote was 24 to 14 and was the opposite of action taken yesterday in the Democratic-controlled Assembly, which voted 41 to 31 in favor of memorializing Congress to effect the court reorganization.

Rod Abolition Urged.

London, March 3 (AP).—A move was launched today to end another of the customs of Dickens' England—the "birching" of young law breakers—when a newspaper, the Daily Herald, declared 80 per cent of the young offenders punished by the whip are back in court within a few years.

Royal Reconciliation Fails.

Rome, March 3 (AP).—Efforts of the Italian royal family to bring about a reconciliation between the former rulers of Spain, Alfonso and Victoria, were reported authoritatively today to have met with no success.

Jewish Doctors Barred.

Berlin, March 3 (AP).—The Riech Medical Chamber today proscribed even scientific discussion between Jews and non-Jews, forbidding non-Jewish doctors to attend a round table to which the Semitic Dr. Albert Moll had invited his colleagues irrespective of race.

'Bee' Gottlieb Tells of Winning, Losing Fights for Her Honor

Assault in Roadhouse Described With Gestures by Blonde to N. Y. Jury; Attacker Trapped Her in Rest Room Finally, She Recalls.

By the United Press.

New York, March 3.—Pretty Beatrice Gottlieb, slim and trim young lady who once played a round of golf with the Prince of Wales, told a jury today how she fought three times for her honor in a Rockaway Point roadhouse last September, and lost.

The first time was in her room. She threw a shoe at the man. The second time also was in her room, and she threw a water pitcher at him.

The third time she was trapped in the ladies' room.

"It was the third time," explained Miss Gottlieb, "that I lost."

Her opponent, she said, was 44-year-old Cary Phelan, manager of the roadhouse. Phelan, charged with criminal and felonious assault, sat in the courtroom and glowered.

Miss Gottlieb brushed back a wisp of hair, which is anything from auburn to platinum blonde, but today was dun-colored, and went into details.

"I went to my room to take a nap. I was awakened by a man's hand on my leg."

"Go on," said Assistant District Attorney Harry I. Huber.

Miss Gottlieb said she threw the shoe. Five minutes later, just as she was dozzing off, he came back. This time she heaved the pitcher. She said the pitcher might not have hit Phelan, but the water did.

The next evening she and two friends were on the veranda of the inn, and Phelan came over to the table, she said. Miss Gottlieb had three beers.

"After I drank the three beers," Miss Gottlieb said, "I asked the way to the ladies' room."

Phelan showed her. She went in, and when she turned around, there was Phelan.

"He grabbed me around the shoulders."

"And what did you do?" asked Huber.

"I said, 'What do you mean?'

"He hit me. I ran for the door, and he caught me and kissed me." Miss Gottlieb said she did not recall everything that happened, but remembered he tore off her pajamas. She bit him, and then he attacked her.

"What did you say?" demanded Huber.

"I said, 'You ought to be ashamed of yourself,'" Miss Gottlieb replied. The prosecution rested.

Navy Study Urged On Plane Building

An earlier conclusion that "the Navy Department should continue with a positive carefuliy considered program of airship construction" was reiterated yesterday in a report of a special committee on airships of the Navy's Science Advisory Board.

The report, made by Chairman William F. Durand, stated that further studies of airships had not changed the committee's original proposal favoring airship construction. In a report 13 months ago the eight-man committee of aeronautical experts stated earlier disaster of the Navy's airships did not indicate further construction and experimentation should be curtailed.

Yesterday's report, one of a series of supplementary reports, included technical data that will be published by the Navy for scientists and research students.

Bill for Sugar Tax Perils Cuban Pact

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt's proposal to place an excise tax of ¾ of a cent a pound on sugar would necessitate revision of the Cuban-American reciprocal trade agreement if it were enacted by Congress.

In announcing this yesterday, State Department officials said no steps could be taken toward this end until the exact amount of the proposed tax is determined by Congress.

Complete abandonment of the trade agreement, which became effective in September, 1934, would be the only alternative if the Cuban government refused to negotiate a revision of the pact to conform to the new tax.

Under Article 8 of the agreement, the United States Government obligated itself to impose no special tax on Cuban sugar higher than the ½ cent per pound processing tax then in effect. The latter levy was abolished when the Supreme Court held the agricultural administration act unconstitutional.

The trade agreement permits reinstatement of that ½ cent per pound duty.

Tydings Warns Of 'Short Cuts InGovernment'

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Raleigh, N. C., March 3.—Warning against "short cuts, with an attendant surrender of Democratic philosophy and processes," Senator Millard E. Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, tonight told a Democratic State-wide rally here to cling to their "heritage of a free Democracy."

"Let us insist on a Government of justice; a Government of law, and not of men; a Government of three branches, each powerful within its rightful sphere; a tripod upon which rests the past and the future welfare of men," Senator Tydings said.

The Marylander, who recently struck out against the President's judiciary program, mentioned it only by inference in his speech, but discussed European "dictatorships" at length. Only by implication did he suggest that "it can happen here."

Points to Tragedy.

"It appears that these peoples who surrender up powers to dictators, whether of the right or of the left, think they are doing something new;" he said, "that, if the people will only give complete temporary power to some man who promises to free them and make them prosperous and happy by the exercise of that power, their troubles all are over. What a tragedy!"

Tydings said he wanted to "deal a blow at some of the sophistries which seem to be offered to our own people as a solution out of their difficulties," by pointing out that Government had nothing to do with the modern advances in science and invention, but were created by "free men, men of science and invention."

"In truth, Government has only the most infinitesimal part in creating any of the wealth, possessions or economic prosperity, which you enjoy," he said.

"Opportunity to Prosper."

"All that Government can do is to give you an opportunity to prosper, explore, learn and acquire. It cannot plow your lands; it cannot sow or harvest your crop; it cannot run your fctaory; it cannot pay your taxes; it cannot put food on your table or clothing upon your back; it cannot inter your remains. * * *

"Regulation of the economic life of a nation is a proper governmental function, but control and operation of the economic life of a nation is not a proper governmental function in a democracy. Complete control of economic life, moreover, cannot be accomplished without a corresponding surrender of the right of every man to think, to act and to live as a free man."

District's Plight Satirized by Women in Skit

Family Troubles of 'Uncle Sam' and 'Mr. D. C.' Burlesqued by Voteless Women Voters League

The Jacobs report was dramatically done to a turn yesterday at a luncheon given at the Mayflower Hotel by the Voteless District of Columbia League of Women Voters. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was among the distinguished guests who watched "Uncle Sam" and "Mr. D. C." work out their generous problems, with all their "imponderables," before "Mr. Jacobs' Report."

There was first a lengthy, laughable discussion of the services "Uncle Sam" had given to "Mr. D. C.," and vice versa, in an effort to see whether their accounts could be balanced according to suggestions of "Mr. Jacobs' Report." Ways and means of supporting a Capital Planning Commission—all for "Mr. D. C."—without his wish or consent—to "build the city on a monumental scale" were next disposed of; and then the subject of "per capita cost in the District" was compared with similar costs in cities of about the same size. Characters portraying four cities—Cincinnati, Jersey City, Newark and New Orleans stood beside "D. C. Taxpayer" and in the presence of "Mr. Jacobs' report," explained the whys and wherefores of their per capita costs, showing incidentally why the case of the District could not be satisfactorily diagnosed by standards applied to them.

"Miss National Representation" then appeared upon the scene and suggested that the only cure for the District's case was suffrage. But neither "Uncle Sam" nor "Mr. Jacobs' Report" was impressed. Said they: "We'll discuss it with Congress."

In a monologue entitled "The Vision," Mrs. David Kushner portrayed the plight of working women and the need of a national law insuring shorter hours, minimum wages, and favorable working conditions for all wage earners. "Giving charity to those in need is just like going in the back door when the front door is open," said the working woman she was depicting. "All we want is a decent job and a little slice of decent living."

In a brief speech following the playlet and monologue, Mrs. Roosevelt urged the League of Women Voters to expand its influence and to bring more women into its fold. "There are only two ways we women can help change conditions that need to be changed," she said. "We can arouse public opinion, and we can study the facts in order to meet all arguments against the need for change."

One of the most difficult problems in this regard is to get women "to study a question before they get excited about it," she continued. "The League of Women Voters is one organization that does find out the facts of problems in which it is interested. The program we have just seen proves that."

In conclusion, Mrs. Roosevelt stressed that "we must not be contented with conditions in our country just because people tell us they are better than in other countries. We must make up our mind as to how they can be improved, and we must work together to that end. We must remember that our Nation was designed to be one in which people were contented, and where privileges were rather equally divided. Those of us who live in comparative comfort must not forget that there are others who are not so fortunate. Such an organization as the League of Women Voters has a real influence because its program is based on a thorough study of the problems to be solved."

Mrs. William Kittle, president of the D. C. League of Women Voters, presided at the luncheon. At the beginning of the program she mentioned that current interests of the league's department of government included: (1) suffrage for the District; (2) repeal of the "red rider;" (3) a new juvenile court law; (4) a 40-hour week and better wages for women workers.

Mrs. Edwin Chapin gave a brief report on the status of the "Red Rider," and explained the program the league had been carrying out to repeal it. Mrs. James Wagonette talked briefly on the juvenile court bill, which has just passed the House of Representatives.

The cast presenting the playlet included the following: "Mr. D. C.," Mrs. Charles H. Weston; "Uncle Sam," Mrs. M. O. Lorenz; "Mr. Jacobs' Report," Mrs. Ernest Parkinson; "Mr. D. C. Taxpayer," Mrs. Arthur Altmeyer; "Newark," Mrs. Pearl B. Klein; "Cincinnati," Mrs. Harold Krough; "Jersey City," Mrs. Louis Ottenberg; "New Orleans," Mrs. Eugene Duffield; "Miss National Representation," Mrs. Elwood Street.

Lamont Claims Van Sweringen Trading Losses

Morgan Partner Admits Wide Influence, Denies 'Discrimination.'

By the Associated Press.

Thomas W. Lamont, elderly, crisp-voiced partner in J. P. Morgan & Co., testified yesterday his firm had lost more than $1,294,000 since 1920 on its transactions with the Van Sweringen rail and real estate empire.

He acknowledged at a Senate inquiry that the banking house and its individual partners had made an $8,326,000 profit through handling the late Van Sweringen Brothers' vast security issues, but argued this was offset by a $9,621,000 loss of loans.

Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, of the Senate Railway Finance Committee offered documentary evidence in an effort to show there was a "scramble" by New York financial houses for the privilege of underwriting the Van Sweringen stock and bond issues.

Morgan finally captured this business, he contended, and headed a syndicate which issued $518,627,000 worth of Van Sweringen securities during the last 16 years.

He contended Morgan's ability to distribute these securities among other financial firms for retail selling gave it "influence over thousands of security dealers all over the country" and "power over other banks."

Denying his company "discriminated among various banks," Lamont admitted "we had a relationship" with many security dealers. He placed the number at "between 500 and 700, not thousands."

Lost Boy Located.

Herkimer, N. Y., March 3 (AP).—Missing 44 hours, Willie James Zaffarano, 6, was found today weak from hunger, in the closet of a vacant apartment, where two companions had locked him during a game of "cop and robber." Dr. James F. Gallo said 24 hours more in the closet would have been fatal.

Roper Advises Conference on Pay and Hours

Asks Business Join Hands With Labor to Solve Mutual Problems.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Roper proposed yesterday that business join hands with labor and agriculture to develop a "co-ordinated" attack on problems of wages, hours, child labor and production control.

Addressing the Business Advisory Council, Roper suggested it hold regional conferences, with spokesmen for the other two groups, and later arrange a "general welfare" meeting here.

He asserted there is need for "an open-minded" and co-operative approach to the problems and expressed the belief a general conference would produce "a formula to alleviate maladjustments and misunderstandings."

"Fundamentally," the Commerce Department chief continued, "studies as related to agriculture, commerce and labor must be more definitely and more closely interwoven in a common objective to serve the general welfare."

The council, composed of private business men who advise the Commerce Department, took the suggestion under consideration.

Earlier, the group had scanned new wage-and-hour proposals, including a flexible method for eliminating "excessively" long hours and low pay.

Roper told his press conference this scheme, drafted by Donald R. Richberg, former NRA administrator, and other advisers, "is quite worthy of consideration." He added, however, that "I am not ready to reach a too-hurried decision" on any one solution.

R. I. Senate Hits Plan.

Providence, R. I., March 3 (AP).—On a straight party vote, 26 to 15, the Senate today passed a resolution opposing the Roosevelt plan to increase the Supreme Court by six judges, and urged the Rhode Island Representatives in Congress to work against the plan.

U. S. Jury Service For Women Urged

By the Associated Press.

Two dozen fashionably dressed women appearing before a House Judiciary sub-committee, disagreed emphatically yesterday with an early English legal theory that women should be excluded from jury service because of "defect of sex."

They urged favorable action on a bill to allow women to serve on Federal juries in all States.

Miss Burnita Shelton Matthews, representing the National Association of Women Lawyers, said 21 States now permit women to serve on juries.

Judges in those States say," she observed, "that women make just as good jurors as men."

"In my new picture 'Swing High, Swing Low' I sing a song for the first time since I have been on the screen. To do this, I spent months taking singing lessons. And with this added strain, my throat was not in good shape. My singing coach suggested that when choosing cigarettes, I select a light smoke. And so I changed to Luckies. Since then I've found that a light smoke and my throat get along together just fine."

Parley Power For NLB Urged To End Strike

Motion in Congress Seen as Threatening Realm of Miss Perkins.

By William V. Nessly.

On the heels of the wave of strikes and threatened strikes confronting the country in recent days, Representative Henry Ellenbogen (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, moved in Congress yesterday to grant to the National Labor Relations Board powers of mediation and conciliation in labor disputes.

He offered amendments to the Wagner-Connery labor relations act that would expand present authority, including the power of subpena, of the board set up to act on charges of unfair labor practices prohibited by the act.

The Pennsylvanian thus, in effect, crossed swords with Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who has specifically asked Congress for the power of subpena to investigate causes of labor disputes before such differences reach the strike point.

Asked About Plan.

Asked last night if his proposal would not, in fact, do away with the conciliation service of the Department of Labor, Ellenbogen said "I was afraid you were going to ask me that."

"However," he added, "I feel that the Labor Relations Board is the proper Government agency to exercise the power of mediation and conciliation. It is most important that we have an impartial agency with such authority to settle the wave of strikes now developing before the disputes develop into strikes."

He said that even without the mediation power the board had settled 331, or about 45 per cent of its cases by mediation, "practically in all cases by the field staff of the board. * * *

"There seems to be no reason why this type of activity should not be carried on by the staff and the board itself. * * * Where the parties to a dispute are unable, even with the aid of the board, to reach an amicable adjustment the board should have the right to hold hearings and to publish the facts in the case."

Board's Fate at Issue.

The fate of the Labor Relations Board itself is a factor that probably will have a bearing on the Ellenbogen proposal. Validity of the labor relations act is under attack in five cases now before the Supreme Court, and no less a labor figure than John L. Lewis has said publicly that labor forces have abandoned hope, "knowing the Supreme Court as we do" that the act will be upheld. Should the act be invalidated whatever threat there may be to the Labor Department's powers in the Ellebogen amendments would automatically disappear.

The Labor Board's offices here, incidentally, are scheduled to be the scene of the next chapter in Lewis' war on the employe representation plan in Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, with which Lewis' forces have just signed a recognition, hour and wage contract at Pittsburgh.

Lewis has said he would destroy the employe representation system, which he calls a company union, and in line with that declaration his forces filed charges last year with the Labor Board charging domination of the representation plan by the company.

Marshals Witnesses.

Prolonged hearings already have been held, at which numerous employes testified in behalf of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, which are Lewis organizations. The corporation has marshaled its witnesses for resumption of the hearings, the date of which is yet to be set. Board members are planning to resume the case unless the union forces should ask for a dismissal. It was pointed out at board offices yesterday that the wage and hour contract signed Tuesday did not cover the points at issue in the case before the board.

Meanwhile, observers here, astonished at the rapidity of Lewis' progress in his drive to unionize mass production industries through his Committee for Industrial Organization, speculated on his next step. He was quoted in New York yesterday as saying a projected drive for members in the textile industry probably would come next, though rubber, oil and other industries also are known to be on the list of those likely to feel his grip.

Millions of workers in those fields of industrial activity are potential members of the Lewis organizations, and the powerful head of the United Mine Workers apparently has before him the greatest year of organization activity in the history of any labor leader.

There has even been speculation that his drive might spread approved labor standards and wages so widely that it would greatly simplify President Roosevelt's task in the way of hour and wage legislation, leaving to the Government only the work of administering enactments or agreements calling for standards which Lewis himself has been able to establish by collective bargaining.

In connection with Lewis' reported intention to start soon his drive in the textile industry, it was pointed out that more than 1,000,000 persons are employed in that field, while the United Textile Workers, headed by Francis J. Gorman, has been able to organize only a small portion of them. The union has joined Lewis' C. I. O., being one of those unions suspended by the American Federation of Labor on charges of "dual unionism."

employe representatives at its parley with Chrysler officials at Detroit and contended that left the U. A. W. A. as the sole bargaining agent for 67,000 of the corporation's employes.

Meanwhile, 250 strikers and sympathizers engaged in a tear gas and rock battle with 40 policemen near the Perennial Dye Works at West Warwick, R. I.

Pickets stationed along roads in the Rhode Island truck drivers' strike seized one truck and fired the paper box cargo of another.

Three hundred nonunion men drove 78 C. I. O. unionists from the strike-bound Holmes Foundry at Sarnia, Ontario, after a two-hour hand to hand battle. Eight men were taken to a hospital and a score of others were injured. Iron rods were wielded by the combatants. Twenty-six strikers were arrested on trespassing charges.

Between 50 and 100 employes sat down in a Chicago printing plant.

A truce was reached in a sit-down strike at the Ferro Stamping Manufacturing Co. in Detroit, and officials of the Murray Body Corporation opened negotiations with the U. A. W. A. in an attempt to settle another strike, affecting 6,500.

Strikes at the Northern States Power Co. in Minneapolis and the National Worsted Mills at Falconer, N. Y., were settled. They had affected approximately 1,000 workers.

Coshocton, Ohio, March 3 (AP).—William Green, militant president of the American Federation of Labor, tonight discounted recognition of rival unions by steel companies and declared that the federation would continue its fight to become sole bargaining agent between workers and employers despite the wage increases and shorter working hours granted by major companies.

Green observed his sixty-fifth birthday at his home here.

He said agreement obtained from steel companies represented definite economic progress for the workers but failed to accomplish objectives of the American Federation of Labor.

In a genial mood, he nevertheless expressed determination to adhere to the federation policy of organizing workers by crafts, which brought a split with John L. Lewis and the Committee for Industrial Organization, which fosters unionism by industries.

Lewis' lieutenants hailed the agreement with steel concerns as "labor's greatest victory," but Green expressed a different opinion.

"Signing of the agreement means that the C. I. O. did not stand up for recognition of independent unions as the sole collective bargaining agencies," he said. "It is a tacit recognition of company unions."

Green declared:

"Failure of the agreement to designate democratic unions specifically as the sole collective bargaining agent for the workers means continuation of the struggle between company unions and independent unions in the method of settling working problems."

Trailer Inquiry Will Start Today

The Commissioners' committee to formulate a policy governing automobile trailers will begin functioning today, Assistant Corporation Counsel Edward W. Thomas, chairman, announced yesterday.

Thomas said he will confer with Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer on new traffic problems which have arisen through the development of trailers. Later, Thomas said, he will consult with Welfare Director Elwood Street, Health Officer George C. Ruhland, Police Superintendent E. W. Brown and C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks.

The committee appointed by the Commissioners several days ago was instructed to "set up necessary traffic regulations and to evolve in general a permanent program which will be effective for the next several years."

Lawyer-Poet Dies.

New York, March 3 (AP).—William Samuel Johnson, poet, novelist and lawyer, died last night at the age of 78. Among his novels were "Glamourie" and "Nothing Else Matters." His best known poem was "Prayer for Peace," used by Theodore Roosevelt as the introduction to his book "America and the World War."

Escaped Convict Surrenders, Wins Pardon in Ohio

Columbus, Ohio, March 3 (AP).—Gov. Martin L. Davey granted a full pardon tonight to T. F. Cannon, apprehended recently in Pittsburgh more than 15 years after he escaped from the London prison farm.

The Governor said that "unquestionably he has suffered through many years of fear and self-repression—far more, I believe, than was the original purpose of society when he was sentenced as a youth."

Cannon voluntarily came here today from Pittsburgh, where he had married and become a respected steel mill foreman during his long period of freedom.

Drillers Explore Memorial Sites

Civilian drillers working under the Army Engineer's office yesterday completed their second boring in quest of a foundation for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial and prepared to start work on the third today.

The third boring will be made 190 feet East of the first and the same distance South of the second, said Francis Gillen, National Park Service Engineer.

General Electric to Open Parley With C.I.O. Chieftains March 15

Corporation Third Morgan Affiliate to Recognize Lewis' Organization; Wall Street Stand Watched.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 3.—The General Electric Corporation signified its willingness today to negotiate with representatives of the Committee for Industrial Organization on a company-wide basis.

Following on the heels of bargaining agreements by General Motors and the United States Steel Corporation, General Electric's move brought into line a third corporation which has a close relationship to J. P. Morgan and Company.

Junius Morgan is on the board of directors of "big steel" and General Motors. Francis T. Bartow, of J. P. Morgan and Company, and Henry S. Morgan, of Morgan, Stanley and Company, are General Electric directors.

Watch Wall Street.

Financial circles also pointed to the relationship of the Du Ponts with the General Motors Corporation, as they examined what apparent course Wall Street would take in the future, dealing with labor.

John L. Lewis, C. I. O. leader, declined to comment on his organization's latest advance as he left for Washington after attending a conference here with bituminous coal operators.

He likewise withheld comment on reports from his associates in Washington that he planned to move next on the oil and textile industries. In oil he would pit his union against that other financial titan, the Rockefellers.

Gerard Swope, president of General Electric, and James B. Carey, head of the United Electrical and Radio Workers of America, C. I. O. affiliate, announced a conference would be held March 15 to discuss general policies which may affect all of General Electric's 60,000 employes.

Lewis Challenged.

Pittsburgh, March 3 (AP).—Big Steel" served notice today on John L. Lewis that it will continue to recognize its own employe representatives in collective bargaining as well as his industrial union.

Union leaders and executives of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation issued conflicting statements on the future of the company's employe representation plan, following President Benjamin F. Fairless' signing of a contract with the steel workers' organizing committee.

Philip Murray, the scholarly, gray-haired union leader who climaxed 33 years of labor negotiations by obtaining the contract, raised the issue as he planned with 40 key organizers to intensify the drive to bring the country's 540,000 steel workers into one big union. Murray said:

The signing of this agreement definitely marks the end of the employe representation plan in the steel industry."

An official statement by Carnegie-Illinois of largest subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, said the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, the nucleus of Murray's drive, was but one channel for collective bargaining. The statement follows:

"The policy of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation with regard to collective bargaining with its employes remains unchanged. As previously stated on many occasions, the company recognizes the right of its employes to organize and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

"The company will recognize any individual, or group or organization as the spokesmen for those employes whom they represent, but it will not recognize any single organization or group as the exclusive bargaining agency for all employes."

"Under this policy the status of the employe representation plan is likewise unchanged. It will continue as the spokesman for those of the employes who prefer that method of collective bargaining, which has proved so mutually satisfactory throughout its existence."

This issue appeared the only dark cloud on an otherwise bright horizon in the Nation's $5,000,000,000 steel industry.

Almost without exception, steel circles hailed the action of Carnegie-Illinois and more than a dozen other companies in establishing a $5 minimum daily wage for common labor and in many cases a 40-hour week, as eliminating the threat of a possible steel strike.

Labor regarded Carnegie-Illinois' recongition of the union as the forerunner of similar action by the entire industry.

Demands Exclusive Rights.

Detroit, March 3 (AP).—The United Automobile Workers of America presented itself tonight as sole bargaining agency for 87,000 employes of the Chrysler corporation.

In a sudden stratagem less than three hours after collective bargaining conferences with Chrysler officials opened, the union presented resignations of 103 out of 120 employe representatives on work councils in Chrysler plants in the Detroit area.

The resignations, identically worded, said "the great majority of our constituents are heartily in favor of the U. A. W. A. being the sole bargaining agency to represent them."

Debate National Wage.

As the Chrysler negotiations got under way, other union officials were pressing toward conclusion of settlement conferences with General Motors, only the question of a national minimum hourly wage blocking final agreement, and a union committee conferred with officials of the Murray Corporation of America, which supplies part of the body requirements of the Ford Motor Co., and other producers. Some 1,500 union workers held the Murray plant where a mass sit-down strike started yesterday.

Describing the Chrysler conference as an advance toward a "general understanding in the automobile industry," Homer Martin, U. A. W. A. president, predicted that "other steps will follow in logical sequence as other parts of the industry recognize the union and deal with it."

He added that this statement "does not exclude Ford."

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, lumbago, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills (Adv.)

The More Abundant Life.

Where breathes the man who said not to himself yesterday—"Would Heaven I were Jimmy Brady!" For yesterday was spring—and there was Jimmy. Locked in his small breast is the combined heart of all male humankind—young and old, rich and poor, white and brown alike.

The first vague wakefulness yesterday gave hint that somehow the earth had stirred. The intake of open air brought unmistakably the lure of warm earth, the feathery first kiss of spring sun, the disturbing sense of ice gone out of trout streams, of open fairways, and surf on sky-baked sand. The house was queerly chill, lacking the cozy comfort it has had for months. Life moved outdoors.

And there, sure enough, beside our plate on the breakfast table, on the very front page, was Jimmy. To chuck it all! Of what importance books or walls or duties: or the stifling proprieties of striving and respecting? Why bear such burdens? Florida, summer sun and the ball club! Sweat and dirt and loud yelling! Running and laughter and sound sleep! Nay, more than mere chance impulse. To save our pennies since the fall, even our Christmas money, and through the long cold months to bide carefully the time of spring's return, and the ball club is off to the South.

Aye, Jimmy, my boy, my head tells me that you are wrong, but my heart says—"Would to Heaven I were you!"

Canada's Shrinking Deficit.

It would, of course, be unfair to draw invidious comparisons between the size of our Federal deficit and that of the Canadian Dominion government. It is entirely in order, however, to call attention to the 40 per cent shrinkage of the Canadian deficit during the present fiscal year and to note that the estimated deficit of $35,000,000 for the coming fiscal year is less than 7 per cent of total estimated expenditures. This rapid progress toward a balanced budget contrasts strikingly with our own gloomy prospects in this field.

The difference between the American and Canadian experience is the more impressive because business improvement across the border has proceeded at about the same rate as in the United States. There, as here, the burden of unemployment and the demands for relief have not been greatly lightened during the past year. The rapid improvement in Canadian finances is primarily due to the fact that expenditures are being kept down while revenues are rising.

Our revenues are also rising rapidly, but our extravagant scale of expenditure prevents us from approaching the goal of a balanced budget in the way which is imperative. That is the moral which stands out from contemplation of the Canadian budgetary figures.

The Duce And The Bambini.

It is comforting to know that there are limits even to the power of dictators.

For more than 14 years Benito Mussolini has been in a very real sense the absolute ruler of Italy. He made of parliament a rubber stamp and of the press a megaphone. At his bidding the buried grandeur that was Rome was exposed to view. Lake Neva was drained and hundreds of Italian men and boys sent to their doom in the Ethiopian war.

But for all his arts of persuasion and his powers of intimidation he has failed to achieve one of his major ambitions; more bambini to wear the blackshirt and be enrolled in the Sons of the She Wolf; more cannon fodder for Italy's future wars.

The figures are eloquent. In those bad old days before the World War, when Italy was steeped in the evils of democracy and the trains didn't run on time, there were 7.4 marriages per 1,000 of population annually and 31.7 births. Despite a high death rate the Italian population in the period 1911-1914 was increasing at the rate of 12.2 per 1,000.

Since 1922, despite bachelor taxes, subsidies to large families, incessant propaganda in the press and even the force of Mussolini's own example, the marriage rate has fallen to 7.2, the birth rate to 22.2 and the excess of births over deaths to 8.7.

No wonder, then, that the Fascist Grand Council is being called to consider how to combat this tendency which Il Popolo d'Italia of Milan cogently points out has deprived Italy of 15 army divisions. The Italian population, particularly the middle class, appears to be engaged in a sit-down strike which not even the all-powerful Duce can upset.

Industrial Statesmanship.

That is the verdict of John L. Lewis on the agreement signed between the Carnegie-Illinois Company, major subsidiary of the U. S. Steel Corporation, and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, representing the C. I. O. This time Mr. Lewis has chosen his words well and their accuracy is indisputable. The "industrial statesmanship" which he attributes to Myron C. Taylor in the negotiations leading to this step is shared by the man who is now indisputably America's most prominent labor leader.

There are many important secondary aspects of this agreement. It presages increased wages for the entire steel industry, broadening the base of prosperity by increasing the purchasing power of several hundred thousand industrial workers. It establishes a basic 40-hour week, virtually fixing that long-sought goal as the standard of American industry and, incidentally, clearing up the difficulties of the Navy in obtaining steel under the specifications of the Walsh-Healey act.

The agreement, further, removes the strike threat which has been hanging over the steel industry and immeasurably brightens prospects of stabilized recovery. Finally it brings a prestige to Mr. Lewis and the C. I. O. which bids fair to heal the split in the ranks of organized labor. William Green and the craft unionists of the A. F. of L. will now do well to make their peace with what has become the dominant wing of the American labor movement.

But over and above these significant consequences stands out the fact that a workable formula for industrial peace has been established—by voluntary and co-operative action of management and labor. Full recognition of the rights of independent unionism has been granted by that giant corporation which has always most vigorously opposed the establishment of such rights.

If the C. I. O. plays its cards carefully there is little doubt that it will, in due time, be successful in bringing the great majority of the steel workers under its banner. It is not merely that management has now formally withdrawn opposition to such a trend. Industrial unionism is also recognized by all close students of the problem as the natural form in steel and other mass-production industries. In the words of the important study on the steel industry just published by the Bureau of Business Research, of the University of Pittsburgh: "The logic of the industry's operations is such that vertical rather than craft organization is called for."

It will not be easy for the C. I. O. to change its tactics so as to utilize the new situation constructively. Preparations for bitter industrial warfare must give way to the less dramatic, more constructive leadership involved in slowly building an inclusive unionism which will have the interests of the whole industry, not just a minority of its employes, at heart. Here will be the real test of the caliber of John L. Lewis and his associates.

There is reason to suppose that the test will be successfully met. It is now revealed that Mr. Lewis and Mr. Taylor, chairman of the board of the U. S. Steel Corporation, have been working for "several months" at the accord reached this week. Their negotiations, in other words, antedated the General Motors strike. Although this was naturally given full support by the C. I. O., once it was under way, there is much evidence that it was an outburst of industrial warfare undesired by Mr. Lewis.

The General Motors strike was settled, by compromise, on the same general basis as that to which the steel corporation now agrees voluntarily. With the principle of real collective bargaining thus firmly established its gradual extension, as the unions prove competent to shoulder their responsibilities, should prove almost automatic. If so, and if proof of a sense of social responsibility on the part of organized labor is shown by repudiation of the sit-down strike technique, the chances of constructive industrial relations should be brighter than has been the case for many years.

This is no "victory" for labor over management, or vice versa. It is a triumph for the good of the Nation as a whole. Plenty of problems lie ahead in this field, and ground won by good-will can be lost again by obduracy and rancor on either side. It is the part of industrial statesmanship to see that such blunders do not destroy the present cheerful prospect.

A Plain Warning.

The SEC has issued a significant warning to American investors about to receive guaranteed bonds of the Reich government in exchange for unpaid coupons and other claims. The statement is especially interesting as an indication of the type of protection that the SEC is prepared to afford investors in foreign securities under the securities act.

In this particular case, of course, the recipients of the German bonds will not be influenced by the information that the Reich has an unacknowledged public debt of large proportions represented by advance tax certificates, work-creation bills and other special forms of financing. As the SEC states, the bonds apparently represent the only practicable means by which the holders of past-due coupons on German security issues can hope to obtain "something of value" in satisfaction of their claims.

The significant aspect of the statement is found in the explanation that because of these special circumstances the SEC has decided not to prevent or suspend the registration statement. There is a plain warning, that its willingness to overlook an omission in this case "is not to be construed as an indication that the commission may take a similar position with regard to future security offerings."

In thus giving notice that an exception in this instance is not to be regarded as a precedent for future guidance, the SEC affirms indirectly its intention to safeguard American investors, insofar as publicity can do so, against the mischievous suppression of facts that investors should know. In view of the concealment of financial data that has become customary in countries living under the rule of dictators, it looks as though several of them would have to mend their ways in order to float public issues in the American market, even where the Johnson act does not disbar them as defaulters.

Unilateral Co-operation.

President Roosevelt first advanced the idea that the constitutional issue could be speedily terminated by "co-operation" on the part of the Supreme Court. In his message to Congress last January he declared: "With a better understanding of our purposes, and a more intelligent recognition of our needs, as a Nation, it is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action into closer harmony." This was followed by the assertion that "the judicial branch also is asked by the people to do its part in making democracy successful."

After several visits to the White House Representative Sumners, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, has now virtually called upon justices over 70 to retire from active duty. His language was carefully guarded. Yet its intent appears unmistakable. The controversy over the Supreme Court, he told the House, "can be worked out without hurt to the public interest, without leaving any scars," if the legislative, executive and judicial branches of the Government manifest "that co-operation and mutually respectful attitude" and that "regard for the Nation's interest . . . which the country has a right to expect in this emergency."

Adherence to this formula, Mr. Sumners further declared, "will make the desired result not only probable but certain." Presumably the desired result is the retirement of justices who have found various New Deal measures inimical to the Constitution. In short, Mr. Sumners broadly hints that it is the patriotic duty of septuagenarian justices to relinquish their duties so that President Roosevelt may avoid the risk of a thumping licking on his court-packing plan.

Considered along with Mr. Sumners' insistence that there is no element of coercion in the new law permitting justices to retire with guarantee of full pay, this is an ingenuous appeal. Fortunately, it is not likely to have any bearing upon the Supreme Court controversy. For no member of the court can be expected to accept the insulting intimation that the best interests of the country would be served by his withdrawal. By presenting the issue in that light Mr. Sumners has made it virtually impossible that any immediate change will be made in the court's membership as a result of his measure.

The emphasis on co-operation from the judiciary is laughable. When the Guffey coal bill was under consideration the President advised Congress to let no doubts as to its constitutionality, however reasonable, interfere with its passage. Congress followed his counsel. But the court found the measure unconstitutional. In these circumstances, an appeal for "co-operation" on the part of the judiciary sounds suspiciously like a request that it also should disregard constitutional limitations if, as and when they are inconsistent with executive policies.

It is not the function of the Supreme Court to "co-operate" with any program that any President may wish to carry out. Each member of that tribunal is sworn to uphold the Constitution, as it stands, regardless of what the President or Congress may think. Instead of tampering with the court in the hope of stretching the organic law to legalize "new instrumentalities of power," it is the Administration which is under obligation to co-operate by shaping such agencies along constitutional lines, or else by seeking new powers from the people.

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the Editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents, brevity is requested. Letters are subject to condensation.

Senatorial Advertising.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Upon seeing Senator Reynolds' picture in the paper this morning indorsing a cigarette, I exclaimed, "Now I am going to write to the Editor of The Post" (I've been trying to contain myself since the recent appearance of Senator Nye's picture and indorsement in the same capacity). A few moments later I read the letter captioned "Traders in Prestige" in the editorial section, and ejaculated, "Thank God." The writer of these strong and truthful denunciations covered all the points I had in mind to stress and did it with a terseness that excels my ability, but I cannot refrain from adding this coda:

The members of our executive, legislative and judicial branches of the Government exist in their various offices not alone to "run the country" and see that the Constitution is observed verbatim, but primarily to serve as living examples of our finest types of manhood in American democracy.

There are thousands of poor Americans in this country who are right now eking out a painful existence under the strain of low salaries, debts and physical handicaps, and among these citizens you will find a significant number of obscure persons who would not sell their personal indorsement to any commercial industry for any price. If they have a word of praise to deliver for a superior article in commerce or elsewhere they give it, not sell it.

Insignificant as such incidents may seem, they determine the true caliber of one's ideals, and it is impossible for a man to be objectively superior in big issues when he stoops to such subjective inferiority in little ones.

AN AMERICAN CITIZEN.
Washington, March 2.

Hopkins Vs. Jefferson.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Harry Hopkins' rabid remarks that "130,000,000 people are being governed by the prejudices of two or three men" will not impress those of us who occasionally resort to reason. Why does Mr. Hopkins assume that a condition, which he regards as so intolerable, be remedied by increasing our highest judiciary to 15 members? Are the men to be appointed by President Roosevelt devoid of human frailties? Probably if Hopkins had his way he would abolish the Supreme Court altogether and give free rein to his own pet prejudicies, if this were possible.

Thomas Jefferson favored limiting the number of Supreme Court Justices to four because he realized the difficulty, if not impossiblity, of obtaining, a greater number for a position which required almost super intelligence.

The opinion of Thomas Jefferson will impress the American people more than the opinion of Harry Hopkins. E. K. G.
Washington, March 2.

The Neutrality Bill.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In neutrality legislation the Congressmen who usually vote for local interests have a chance to vote for national interests—by voting against the proposed legislation.

The drive for this legislation comes from the wishful sentimentalists of the peace societies, and their lack of clear thinking is followed by many Congressmen otherwise intelligent. For example, for untold ages belligerents have obtained whatever help they could by trading with neutrals. It is now proposed to put severe restrictions on this trade. The proposed legislation would be a serious blow to the prospects of a successful defense by France and England against an attack by Germany and Italy. Mussolini has openly applauded this type of legislation and yet the mighty Borah gets so twisted in his thinking that he describes the legislation as lining up the United States as an ally of Great Britain.

Another example—the idea recurs that limiting the export of arms will prevent or shorten foreign wars. It seems incredible that Congressmen can repeat these well-meaning thoughts so uncritically. A moment's consideration should be enough to disclose that shipment of arms to the power that is winning will shorten a war. If the Spanish government finally wins against the Fascist rebels it will afford an illustration of a war which was prolonged by our refusal to ship arms. If Hitler is licking the British and making himself supreme in Europe, our refusal to ship arms will shorten the war, of course, but who imagines that to be advantageous to the United States?

The proposed neutrality legislation would strengthen the military powers and weaken the democratic powers, thus making another world war more probable. We can stay out of that war if we want to—in spite of Senator Nye's rabid views about the political influence of munition makers—but we cannot escape the disastrous economic effects. T. A. B. A Sailor's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was told in Marine Cooks and Stewards Union Hall in Seattle, Wash., September 5, 1936, that their books were never closed but at the present time they were not taking anyone into the union.

I quit work on a ship in San Francisco April 2, 1934. When the strike was called I went on the picket line as captain for the Marine Cooks and Stewards Association from Market street, to pier 54, and there I remained until the strike was over. I spent during this time $250 in cash and hocked my $38 overcoat, my $35 suit and my $25 watch. Then I went to work ashore and worked until July 27, 1935, next I worked on a tanker and got off in Tacoma, Wash., August 25, 1935.

I then went to the Marine Cooks and Stewards Association in Seattle. There I found a condition in regards to shipping about 100 per cent worse than existed in the fink hall in San Francisco, previous to the 1934 strike (where men fought and died on the picket line for decent wages, living and working conditions, and the right to have a union of their own, and a rotary system of shipping, whereby the oldest men on the beach would ship first), I was told the books were closed, was bawled out and insulted because I had a strike and clearance card. If I had worked on ships during the 1934 strike, and made $400 or $500 like a large number of members in the Marine Cooks and Stewards Association did I would have a union book.

I am an American citizen, a World War veteran, not a dog or an animal. The place to win strikes is on the picket line. A union belongs to its members and not a few men holding office positions. At no time during the slavery days of the South were the slaves treated like the International Seamen's Union treated their brother workers after the 1934 West Coast strike.

The slaves of the South, during the slavery days, were given the right to work and live.

Washington's Traffic Dilemma.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Howard F. Wentworth's article in The Post of March 1 on casualties caused by automobiles merits serious thinking. It is a bitter indictment of modern-day civilization that each day and month and year shows increases instead of decreases in the number of accidents.

Industry is well aware of the human and economic loss caused by accidents in factories and in industrial areas. Industry has pursued a systematic safety and educational program for many years and statistics are available covering all phases of life and time loss and an improvement in the record is noted and rewarded. State compensation boards and insurance companies have sponsored safety devices and safety education. It is a generally accepted fact that accidents do not happen but are caused. Carelessness or deviation from accepted safety standards are not tolerated.

Could we not all take a lesson from the experience of American industry?

Hundreds of thousands of our citizens who are still active and alert were born before the automobile was perfected. The generations born since the advent of the automobile have been well-schooled in safety measures. The automobile is now a most necessary and important part of our national existence. It is our job to use it with sanity.

Who is at fault when the casualty lists show constant increase? First, the motorist is at fault, and secondly, the pedestrian is careless. Unless a motorist is a murderer at heart he or she would not wilfully cause an accident. And unless a pedestrian is mentally unsound he or she would not wilfully walk into an accident.

It is a simple matter to enumerate a few of the reasons for the wholesale slaughter of our fellow citizens. Here are a few:

Inadequate State motor vehicle laws.

Lack of enforcement of existing laws.

Conniving of citizens and unscrupulous politicians so that the guilty party will be enabled to evade just punishment.

Pure selfishness in both driving and walking conduct.

A few sidelights on present motor ownership and regulation might be of instructive interest: A citizen can purchase a car for as little as $10. A registration for this car can be secured for a few dollars and a license to drive it for a few dollars more.

New residents of the District of Columbia who have moved here from such congested centers as New York, Chicago, Detroit, etc., will tell you that the Capital City is the worst place they have ever been for traffic violations and lack of police supervision. More cars pass you on the right-hand side in Washington than pass you on the left-hand side. Cars stopped by a red light rarely ever wait for the amber light to change to green before shifting into gear and driving ahead. Motorists constantly make left-hand turns from outside lanes instead of moving into a center lane before making a left-hand turn.

Very few District of Columbia motorists bother to signal to the driver in the rear what they intend doing and if they did he would probably make out he was going to run them down so as to prevent them from getting a second or two ahead of him. Speed law observance is a joke. You drive along some thoroughfares in Washington at the legal speed limit and you will be compelled for your own safety to keep on the extreme right-hand lane, because most all other motorists on that thoroughfare are going faster than you are.

Many cities have reduced the number and severity of the accidents within their limits. They have had "no-accident-weeks" and "no-accident-months;" some paint white crosses where fatal accidents have happened. Some States are doing an excellent job in preventive measures and law enforcement. The little State of Rhode Island has measures worthy of emulation, only to mention one.

For any paid official to pass the buck to the motorists and the pedestrians and throw up his hands in a gesture of helplessness indicates that we need someone on that job with a backbone instead of a wishbone.

It is a common problem and a serious one. A spirit of unselfishness and courtesy is needed and a never ceasing insistence on sobriety and carefulness.

Anyone who refuses by his actions to subscribe to this fair code may pay with his or her life. And what is infinitely worse, be the unwilling cause of bringing sadness and economic loss into some Washington home. VETERAN.

The Post Impressionist

A List to Port.

IN Washington in the Nineties (said the Captain, puffing at his pipe) there were many able and active gentlemen in the Navy Department and some few able and amiable gentlemen willing to emulate the great Sir Joseph Porter, K. C. B. Unfortunately for the would-be stay-at-homes an act of Congress provided that officers should see some sea duty at least once in every eight years. It is four now; it was eight then.

One or two of the gentlemen scheduled for sea duty began to make an intensive study of naval strategy. The problem was to steal up on Active Duty, attack it, subdue it, and then turn it into a Brief Vacation; and they saw in the Hollywood, laid up in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, a means to that end.

The Hollywood was a square-rigged ship equipped with a movable propeller, known as a coffee-grinder; and she carried just enough coal to take her in and out of port. Once the open sea was reached a bolt was removed, the propeller ran free, and the winds were harnessed to the bellying sails.

The Hollywood had been long in retirement and would have remained so but for the big idea hinted at. Why not make her a training ship for gunners? Sea duty might then become a pleasure; just an occasional trip between Norfolk and Newport in the summer and Norfolk and Key West in the winter.

The ship was commissioned in September. In October it proceeded up the Sound as far as Hell Gate, where it anchored while the old boys had their last look at New York. They were four or five days in reaching Newport. Then, after a little more overhauling, Captain B. Latham-Hatch, in command, formally notified the Secretary of the Navy that the Hollywood was ready for duty.

Up to this time everything had been going smoothly. The ship was adequately manned and there was a nice class of earnest lads ready to be instructed, young ideas ready to shoot. And then the blow fell. The Secretary of the Navy, with ideas of his own, ordered the ship to proceed immediately to Montevideo to relieve the Oakland. Incidentally there was a peppery admiral down there, a man with a fine vocabulary, who was looking forward to the arrival of the Hollywood and counting the days till he'd be able to sail for the States. Which has some bearing on what followed.

There was consternation on the Hollywood when the orders came. Ordinarily the old boys would have taken a train for Washington and pulled wires to have themselves relieved. But there was no time for the pulling of wires. "Immediately" in Navy parlance means within 24 hours. Willy-nilly, Captain B. Latham-Hatch and his fine old boys had to sail; and they did; on November 5.

Now Captain B. Latham-Hatch was a sick man. Moreover, he had divers mental quirks which his friends spoke of as amiable eccentricities, nothing more. And perhaps they were right. Should desire to take one's ease be considered a mental disturbance? It meant no great deviation from the normal of Washington, as he knew it. But on the high seas it may be noticeable, even startling.

Captain B. Latham-Hatch took to his bed as soon as the ship reached the open sea. His cabin was on the upper deck on the starboard side. His berth was on the port side of the cabin. When the ship listed a little to port he lay less comfortably. He might even be tossed out of bed, though this was unlikely.

And so Captain B. Latham-Hatch issued orders that the ship be so managed that she should always list to port, and this order went into effect the moment the coffee-grinder was released and the wind took on its job.

Now if the wind had been the right kind of a wind and the sea the right kind of sea the Hollywood would have sailed bravely to Montevideo, obligingly listing to port every inch of the way without the captain having to stir from his bed. But the wind having taken them to mid-Atlantic suddenly grew variable and the sea unkind. For 30 days the ship sailed in circles, going around and 'round and coming out nowhere in particular. It is a matter of record that during that 30 days they made 20 miles to the east.

Then Captain B. Latham-Hatch decided that it was time to take on more provisions, and what better place could there be than Funchal, Madeira, where the wine was excellent? He reported his arrival to Washington and received a blast by return cable, a blast not wholly unconnected with the peppery admiral fuming at Montevideo. So again he set sail for the Uruguayan port, but stopped at the Cape Verde Islands, where he got another blast from Washington. He explained that he thought his coal was on fire. He unloaded it there, and, finding it all right, put it on again and was off again.

The Hollywood arrived at Montevideo on February 14, a lovely little Valentine for the peppery admiral, who promptly ordered Captain B. Latham-Hatch in hack, confined to quarters, pending inquiry.

But, bless you, Captain B. Latham-Hatch was unabashed. His delay, he explained, was due to contrary winds. And that, when you come to think of it, was nothing more than the exact truth.

Just Fishin'.

A LITTLE STORY from Miami Beach reports that Jim Farley, down there for a vacation, went fishing the other day with Seymour Weiss, of New Orleans, described as a hotel man—which he is, but more famous as the cashier of Huey Long's political machine. Mr. Weiss was a very obstreperous enemy of the Roosevelt Administration up to the time of Huey's death, and once during a senatorial inquiry into the financial affairs of the Long outfit he got up out of the witness chair and told Gen. Ansell, who was needling him with questions, that he was of more than half a mind to take him outside and bust him one for luck.

As a boxing spectacle that would have been one of the worst fights the world has ever known, and Mr. Farley, as an old prize fight commissioner, probably would have used his influence to get both boys barred for life. But the incident just goes to show what a rowdy sort of politician Mr Weiss is and to indicate the feeling between Seymour and the Administration during the time that Huey was going on the air and sneering the name of Franklin Del-a-no Roose-velt. Huey had a special way of crowding all the ornery, personal spite of a political feud into the mere pronunciation of Mr. Big's name, and it took some audacity to do it at the time, because Mr. Roosevelt was riding high just then.

* * * *

MR. WEISS was one of Huey's boys who were indicted for violation of the Federal income tax law, and there was much back talk about the purpose of the indictment. The boys in the Administration said Mr. Weiss had enough on him to give him the business, but on Huey's side they said the Administration didn't have a thing and laughed off the indictment as purely political.

This latter seemed very cynical indeed, because, after all, the Federal courts are sacred, and it would be a shocking abuse of the judiciary to have the law on a man merely to punish him for getting out of line and as an example to others around the country. If Mr. Weiss was guilty as charged, then he was no less guilty than Al Capone, who got 11 years for the same thing and, what's more, was sent to Alcatraz to do it the hard way. If Mr. Weiss was guilty, then there were more somber considerations behind the mere violation of the income tax law, because in that case he would have been a party to a system of corruption just as dangerous as Capone's politico-alky regime in Chicago.

* * * *

WELL, THEN, as everybody knows, Huey was killed, and in the scramble of the boys to loot the joint Seymour got away with the real political effects, leaving the Rev. Gerald Smith, the ecclesiastical carpetbagger, with nothing but an old brown suit which he represented as the mantle of Huey Long. Seymour let him keep the suit, and the Reverend wore it to Cleveland for the memorable brother act with old Dr. Townsend and Cash-and-Carry Coughlin, who did a strip-tease, tearing off his coat as a whole mass of feeble but hopeful old men and women sat there wondering what on earth.

Well, all I know is what I see in the papers, as Will Rogers used to say, and after a decent period of mourning for Huey I saw where the Department of Justice had dropped the indictment against Seymour owing to a change in atmosphere. The D. J. didn't specify whether the atmosphere had changed for the better or worse, but that wasn't necessary. Your nose knows.

The Once Over

Taxes and Race Tracks.

Congress is considering a tax on all race-track wagers. This will make Uncle Sam a follower of the ponies. It is the first official admission that wild horses will be needed to drag the country out of debt.

* * * *

If the bill is passed you will be able to ease your conscience at any race track by the thought, "I'm not gambling; I'm just helping my country out of a hole."

* * * *

The idea is already a common topic on all race courses and only yesterday a man rushed up to a window at Hialeah and bet a horse "straight, place and Morgenthau."

* * * *

One of the questions of the moment in turf circles is whether the Government will start the taxes from the stalls or use the walk-up barrier.

* * * *

Race-track operators are already figuring out ways and means to meet the new tax, and they say that at Hialeah Mr. Widener is thinking of claiming exemptions on the ground of dependents. Look at all those flamingoes and royal palms he has to support!

* * * *

The big money wagered on the ponies in this country is the envy of the tax departments. More than $1,000,000 was bet recently on the horses on two different days at Santa Anita, and the $500,000-a-day mutuels play has become common in Florida. The money spent at the tracks is only a small part of what is bet in offices, factories and homes via the bookies, however, and if Uncle Sam could get his cut on this he would be back in the gravy-swimming events.

* * * *

* * * *

"That was an awful short price you gave me on Galloping Gus in the third," you may complain to the bookie.

"Yeah," the bookie may reply in all reasonability, "but kick to Washington, not to me."

* * * *

The horse he is a noble beast,
He is our pal and pet;
He runs like anything to keep
His country out of debt.

* * * *

Come on, boys! It's off to the races for sport and country!

And, listen . . . I've got a good thing in the Surtax Sweepstakes and another in the Section Four, Paragraph Six Handicap.

"Another Sit-down Strike."

The wife of the President of China made a speech in good English on the radio the other day, which is more than most Americans can do.

The jazzing up of the courts is evidently under way. They've already got Rubinoff and his violin.

So far as New York is concerned the greatest sit-down strike was the one staged by Old Man Winter.

One thing the sit-down strike has disposed of is those old-time complaints from the old man when he came home from work that he had been on his feet all day.

Contrast

Two recent League of Nations documents lie before the writer. One emphasizes the figure of $9,295,900,000; the other begins with the figure 28,279,900 Swiss francs—about $6,504,000.

One of these sums represents the total amount that the nations have admitted to Geneva that they spent for armaments in 1935. The other sum represents what the League of Nations budget provides may be spent in 1936 for collective peace action.

Will anyone be uncertain as to which amount was for the first purpose and which is for the second?

More than $9,000,000,000 for the world's war institutions! And it will be a much larger amount this year! Only $6,500,000 for the world's collective peace institution!

There is some food for thought.

Constituent To Congressman

Petunia's Pinkus Pratt Plans Excursion To Capital.

By Louis M. Jiggitts.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Petunia, R. F. D., No. 1.
January 21, 1937.

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman Fulpan:

I have good news. During the last few months I have saved up a little extra money and have decided to visit Washington. Since this is my first trip to the Capital, I am anxious to see some of the prominent people, and I know that with your great influence I shall have the pleasure of meeting some of the most important people in the Nation, and I am very much pleased with the idea.

Please let me know who I can see, and when I should come.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I am,

PINKUS PRATT.

Washington, D. C.
January 25, 1937.

Mr. Pinkus Pratt,
R. F. D. No. 1, Petunia.

My dear Mr. Pratt:

I am answering your letter in the absence of the Congressman, who is unavoidably detained from his office. I am sure that he will be delighted to learn of your proposed visit, and I know that he will be glad to introduce you to some of the other important persons in Washington. Of course, having been a leader here for many years, he knows them all.

Please let us know whom you desire to meet.

Assuring you that this office is always at your service, I am.

Yours, sincerely,
WILLA DOOLITTLE,
Secretary.

Petunia, R. F. D., No. 1.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman Fulpan:

I am pleased to hear from your secretary and to know that you will be glad to help make my visit a success by introducing me to other prominent people in the Capital.

I realize that you know all the people worth knowing, but since your secretary suggests that I mention someone, I am glad to say that I would like to meet the Vice President. I have gread admiration for him and we have several things in common that I would like to talk to him about; for instance, I always go to bed regularly every night, no matter what. In fact, just last night I couldn't attend the community chicken fry because I wouldn't stay up after 8:30 p. m. You might mention this to the Vice President when you see him.

Hoping to hear from you within the next few days so that I can prepare for the trip, I am,

Your old friend,
PINKUS PRATT.

Washington, D. C.
January 30, 1937.

Mr. Pinkus Pratt,
R. F. D. No. 1, Petunia.

Dear Friend Pinkus:

I hope that you will not long delay your trip as I look forward to it with great pleasure. I am always glad to welcome a constituent to the Capital and especially when the constituent is a friend of long standing.

But I regret that it will be impossible for the Vice President to see you at this time. I do not feel that I should insist upon his meeting you during this strenuous session of Congress. He is very busy all day, and since you both retire so early it is evident that a night engagement would be impossible.

Looking forward to your impending visit, I am,

Your friend,
CICERO FULPAN, M. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman Fulpan:

I am sorry that I can't meet the Vice President at this time, but since last writing you I have thought about meeting Mr. James A. Farley, as I admire him greatly.

I also have something in common with him as I am somewhat of a prophet myself. Just this last fall I predicted a mild winter when I noticed the squirrels shedding fur, and I can always foretell the weather by the way my left leg reacts.

It seems that the only thing I never can predict is the winning horse in the Verbena County Fair races. I hope you don't have such luck with the horse races in Maryland.

Your old friend,
PINKUS PRATT.

Mr. Pinkus Pratt,
R. F. D., No. 1, Petunia.

Dear Friend Pinkus:

You seem to have the impression that I play the horses in Maryland, which disturbs me somewhat. I assure you that I never play the horses. All of my time is devoted to the interests of my constituents and the welfare of the country.

In fact, a conscientious Congressman's work is never done and I am above all a conscientious Congressman.

Trusting that you now understand my position, I am

Your friend,

Dear Congressman Fulpan:

I am sorry you never get your work done, but I am sure you have a good reason. Please let me know what arrangements you have made about Mr. James A. Farley and me.

Your old friend,
PINKUS PRATT.

Washington, D. C.
February 9, 1937.

Mr. Pinkus Pratt,
R. F. D. No. 1, Petunia.

Dear Friend Pinkus:

I am afraid that you have misunderstood by statement about my work never being done. I meant, of course, that there is so much to do that I never can finish all of it. I think I can state without fear of successful contradiction that I am the most overworked Congressman in Washington.

Trusting that this will give you an idea of how greatly I appreciate the task of representing my constituents, I am

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman Fulpan:

I know that Mr. Farley is Postmaster General, but I want to know what about meeting him. Your secretary mentioned some time ago that you are well acquainted with all the celebrities and I am anxious that you make this engagement for me.

I want to make my trip soon and I would like to hear from you by return mail.

Dear Friend Pinkus:

I regret that it will be impossible to arrange a meeting with Mr. Farley at this time. He is very busy, and I doubt if he could take off any considerable time from his work even for me. I am afraid that we will have to make other arrangements.

With best wishes for your continued good health, I am

Your friend,

February 17, 1937.

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman Fulpan:

Since you think it advisable not to disturb the V. P. and Mr. Farley at this time, I have decided to wait until the cherry blossoms are in bloom. You realize that I want to make my first trip to Washington worth while.

As I have never seen more than one Senator at one time, perhaps you can arrange a little dinner—say for 10 or 20 Senators and you and me. Such a dinner would be worth publishing in the Verbena County Weekly Bugle and Gazette and ought to help you in your race next year by showing the influence you have in Washington.

Please let me know if you can arrange this little party.

Your old friend,
PINKUS PRATT.

P. S.—I thank you for the wishes about my health, but I suppose you forgot that I have had rheumatism for the last 22 years. The only good thing about it is that it helps me predict the weather, but I do not hope it continues.

Washington, D. C.,

Mr. Pinkus Pratt,

Dear Mr. Pratt:

The Congressman is again unavoidably detained from his office by important official business and I hasten to answer your letter. I am afraid that it will be impossible for the Congressman to arrange a dinner for 10 or 20 Senators.

It is always difficult to get even ten Senators together on anything, and with things as they are just now in Congress, I doubt if anyone could get 20 Senators together, even for a dinner.

But if you just want to see what Senators look like, I feel certain that the Congressman can use his influence to get you a nice seat in the Senate gallery and, of course, he will be delighted to show you the cherry blossoms.

Trusting that we will soon have the pleasure of your company, I am,

Yours sincerely,

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman Fulpan:

I have some sad news. Last night I mentioned my proposed trip to Washington to my wife for the first time. And for the last time, too, I guess. When I mentioned the little extra money I had saved she said it was just the amount she needed for new spring clothes. In fact she said a good deal more than that.

I told her what you were going to do for me and what the trip would mean, but she couldn't understand why I wanted to spend the money gallivanting around Washington with Senators and cherry blossoms when she hadn't had any new clothes for the last five springs, so she declared. She said with the South American influence in the new styles she would have to have a complete new outfit.

I am a peace-loving man, as you know, and I have decided that the spring clothes and harmony is worth more to me than the Senators and the cherry blossoms. So I won't be there this year.

Assuring you that I appreciate the kindness you have shown me, and that I shall be ready to help you in the campaign next year, I remain

My dear Mr. Pratt:

The Congressman regret that your wife has to have clothes. But I am sure that he understands, as he said to tell you that he is also facing the new spring clothes problem.

Trusting that we will have the pleasure of a visit from you sometime between style seasons, I am

8 Small Nations Start Conference On Co-operation

The Hague, The Netherlands, March 3 (AP).—Eight smaller European powers met today to plan economic co-operation that might set an example for their big neighbors.

Prime Minister Hendrikus Colijn, of The Netherlands, opening the conference of "Oslo convention" nations, urged the smaller nations to approach their big neighbors for a more orderly system of exporting and marketing goods.

The Oslo convention, signed in 1930 by Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Switzerland and The Netherlands, bound its adherents to seek lower trade barriers, abolition of exchange restrictions and revival of international credit.

Bishop Cannon Heads New Anti-Saloon Fight

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 3 (AP). The Anti-Saloon League of America closed its twenty-ninth national convention today after adopting an uncompromising policy of fighting alcoholic beverages and placing responsibility for a vigorous new campaign in the hands of a committee of seven.

The committee, of which Bishop James Cannon, jr., was named chairman, was appointed by the larger executive committee and was given full power to carry on the administrative work of national headquarters at Washington.

Soviet Children to Get Military Tactics Drills

Moscow, March 3 (AP).—The Volunteer Society for air and chemical defense announced today it would provide instruction in military tactics and strategy for all children in the Soviet Union between 8 and 18.

War experts will teach the children in a vast network of clubs, camps and shooting stations, where miniature guns, gas masks, tanks, automobiles, toy planes and parachutes will be provided.

French Defense Plan.

Paris, March 3 (AP).—In the event of war, possibly even before, the French army, navy and air force will be unified under one commander, the military committee of the Chamber of Deputies decided today.

Australian Parallel.

LIKE THE UNITED STATES, Australia is a democracy organized along federal lines. But the parallel does not end there. Despite its brief history (the Commonwealth only came into being in 1901) Australia has already run through practically the whole gamut of constitutional questions with which the United States has had to grapple in the century and a half since we became a nation.

Even the question of secession has raised its head in the Commonwealth. Western Australia and to a lesser extent Tasmania and South Australia have, during recent years, begun to find the burdens of federation irksome and have shown an inclination to sever their ties with the Commonwealth. But the secession movement in twentieth century Australia, as was true in nineteenth century America, is an outgrowth of the unsolved problem of the limits of federal power. The pressure in the Commonwealth as in this country has always been in the direction of increased centralization, a pressure more or less successfully resisted by the constituent states.

* * * *

BROADLY SPEAKING, Australia's experience in this regard has not been dissimilar to our own. Despite constitutional and other obstacles, the field of action of the Commonwealth government has steadily been widened, in part through constitutional amendment, in part through judicial interpretation.

Amendment of the Australian constitution requires a majority vote of both houses of parliament followed by a popular referendum. Before the proposed amendment can be incorporated in the constitution it must be approved by a majority of the voters in four of the six states, and by a majority of the voters in the Commonwealth as a whole.

At first glance this seems a much simpler and easier system of constitutional reform than ours, which requires a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress plus a majority vote in the legislatures or constitutional conventions of three-fourths of the States. Yet many Australians are convinced their system, too, imposes an almost insuperable barrier to drastic constitutional changes, particularly with reference to social legislation.

The facts bear them out. Although many referenda on constitutional amendments have been held since 1901, few amendments have actually been adopted and these mostly of minor importance. Between 1908 and 1925 only one amendment was carried, while in that period Parliament approved, on no less than three occasions, proposals for constitutional changes granting large powers of legislation to the Commonwealth regarding commerce, labor and industry.

* * * *

IT MUST NOT be supposed, however, that because of the difficulties of the amending process the balance of power between federal authority and states' rights in Australia has remained constant. Far from it. The authority of the Commonwealth government to legislate along broad lines has greatly expanded. This has largely been made possible through judicial interpretation.

Indeed the Australian High Court (corresponding to our own Supreme Court) has on many occasions been accused of having excluded whole fields of legislation from the jurisdiction of the states. By a series of judicial decisions, for instance, the Commonwealth government has been enabled to exercise far-reaching powers in the handling of industrial disputes. As a writer in the London New Statesman pointed out nearly a decade ago:

"The states have been disappointed in their constitutional champions. The High Court began the century bravely with exposition of 'the spirit of Federation' and injunctions of 'mutual non-interference, but, since 1920, it has preferred a 'natural' interpretation of the Constitution which makes state claims to a share of 'sovereignty' appear very foolish . . . It matters little that the voters have refused to grant to the Commonwealth those increased powers for which it has made point-blank requests. For, as Dakin realized at the very beginning, the Constitution left the states 'legally free but financially bound to the chariot wheels of the Commonwealth.' Unless the Commonwealth consents to loosen their bonds the states must some day surrender responsibilities too heavy to be borne."

A SIMILAR conclusion regarding the role of the High Court was reached by a Royal Commission appointed in 1927 to report on the workings of the federal constitution. The majority of this commission held that one notable feature of the federal system as it had functioned in Australia was the intrusion by the Commonwealth into fields commonly or popularly supposed to be exclusive provinces of the states.

It is interesting, from the American point of view, that the commission, while recommending against any curtailment of authority of the High Court, did suggest retirement of judges of that tribunal at the age of 72. A minority of the commission, however, took the position that federation had become unworkable and recommended the grant of very broad powers to Parliament, except in matters affecting civil liberties.

* * * *

HOWEVER, the High Court has not always been partial to the extension of federal power. Not long ago, for instance, it threw out as unconstitutional an act of Parliament regulating air traffic between the states. And the Privy Council at London recently reversed a decision of the High Court upholding the marketing act.

This act was put through Parliament to give Australian producers of primary products, such as butter and dried fruit, the same measure of protection in the domestic market as that enjoyed by industries benefiting from the tariff. The Privy Council held that the law conflicted with the freedom of interstate trade guaranteed by the Australian constitution.

Following this decision it was immediately proposed in some quarters that the constitution be amended to limit the right of appeal from the Australian High Court to the Privy Council. In more conservative circles, however, the decision of the Privy Council was hailed with acclaim. "The judgment," says a writer in the current issue of the Round Table, "has materially strengthened the prestige of the Privy Council as a final court of appeal for Australia."

For its part the government is now seeking to get around the Privy Council's decision by means of an amendment specifically empowering the Commonwealth Parliament to regulate the marketing of primary products. This amendment, together with an amendment dealing with federal rights to regulate aviation, is to be submitted to the people on March 6.

English Novels

By William Lyons Phelps.

Masterpieces.

Nearly everyone who reads anything reads novels, and I think the reading of contemporary novels like "Gone With the Wind," which it is certainly desirable to read without skipping, is even more interesting to those who have a knowledge of the great English novelists than to those who have not.

Inasmuch as the number of first-class British novelists, if we confine ourselves to the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, is extremely limited, I suggest for the benefit of those who might profit by it, the following list. These works are not only works of genius, they are interesting. I dislike dull novels and will not recommend them, no matter how high is their fame.

* * * *

Richardson's Pamela. Not so great as his Clarissa, but shorter and really diverting.

Fielding's Tom Jones.

Smollett's Humphry Clinker, which a United States Army officer told me was the greatest novel ever written. It is good, anyhow.

Scott's Quentin Durward, which Mark Twain said was so good that Scott could not have written it.

Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice.

Dickens' David Copperfield.

Thackeray's Esmond, which I like best of all his books.

Charlotte Bronte's Jane Eyre.

George Eliot's Adam Bede.

Thomas Hardy's Far From the Madding Crowd.

Stevenson's Treasure Island.

* * * *

These individual books may not in every instance be the author's absolute best, but they are characteristic and all masterpieces of fiction.

Life In Britain

London Correspondent Reports Prospects For New Factory Act; Government Also Looks To National Physique.

By David Wills.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME we pass a new factory act. Just as armies make preparation for the last war, so we in England seem to agitate for years for new laws governing conditions of work in factories, and finally succeed in passing an act prepared for the problems of our fathers. The milestones of the past century were the acts of 1833, 1867 and 1901. Conditions in our factories are still regulated by the general law passed at the time of the Boer War; in so far as they are more advanced in special cases it is the result of collective action by strong trade unions fighting for the interests of its members.

A bill to improve o.. the 1901 acts was prepared in 1913, but the war intervened. The next attempt to bring better conditions was as short-lived as the brief Labor government of 1924. It has taken another 13 years for a bill actually to be submitted to Parliament.

And until this bill passes women and children are permitted to work up to 60 hours a week, while men may work unlimited hours if not controlled by agreements between employers and trade unions, which, in fact, are fairly widespread in the industries where unions are well developed.

In some cases agreements have been made law, as for example in the "eight-hour act" governing work in the coal mining industry. But it is still possible for youths to work practically unlimited hours in retail stores.

History Of I. L. O. Reflects Lag Of Laws.

THE HISTORY of the efforts made by the International Labor Office to introduce more drastic controls over working conditions shows both how far behind the age is our present legislation, and how sluggish in their reactions are the members of our present government.

The regulations to be imposed by our new act illustrate the point still further. Thus the working hours of men are still unspecified. Although children are supposed to stay at school until they are 15, under the "school-leaving act" exemptions to this requirement are granted and the new Factory act will make it easier to grant such exemptions by not putting any lower limit on the age of entry to industry. Women and children are not to work more than 48 hours a week, which compares none too well with the standard of 40 hours a week adopted by the I. L. O. convention for men as well as women, and put into force in France by M. Blum's government.

Even this 48 hours is not a maximum, for overtime up to 6 hours a week is permitted, subject to the generous maximum of 100 hours overtime in a year. And further, in trades subject to seasonal fluctuations, the 100 hours overtime limit may be extended to 150 hours if permission is granted by the Secretary of State.

The new bill has more modern regulation for the heating and lighting of work places, for cleanliness, prevention of fire and so on. The minimum space to be provided per worker is increased to 400 cubic feet, compared with a previous 250 cubic feet. But operation of these clauses is postponed for a further four years, presumably on the argument that 4 years doesn't make much difference when the act is already 25 years overdue.

Factory Inspectors Increased By Proposal.

AN ESSENTIAL PART of the new legislation is an increase in the number of factory inspectors. The futility of merely passing laws and not backing them up with adequate inspection and prosecution for offenses has been emphasized recently by the report of the committee which inquired into the Gresford colliery disaster. In 1934 an explosion and fire in the Gresford pit killed 265 men; their bodies are still underground, the pit still sealed. A long investigation was made by the Chief Inspector of Mines, a representative of the owners and one of the union. Despite differences in laying the blame, the report shows persistent and flagrant breaches of the laws regulating conditions of work.

The mine was improperly ventilated, shots were fired in too rapid succession to speed up output, men worked longer than the legal 8 hours, commercial requirements were dominant. Much of the evidence at the inquiry was found inadequate, and the matter is by no means closed. But it sticks out a mile that to prevent such accidents there must be a large staff of government inspectors, able to make frequent examination and to bring breaches of the law to prompt punishment.

An example of another kind of difficulty in legislating for social purposes has been given by the government amendment to the shipping act to make it an offense to overload a ship and send it to sea. Previously it was necessary to prove that those who sent a ship to sea overloaded knew that life was thereby endangered before any punitive action could be taken. Because of this hole in the law, although the purposes of the law were evident, the court recently held that the managers of the company which sent the Crescenta to sea in an overloaded condition could not be held responsible for the loss of life when it foundered. Another loophole in the law regulating safety at sea has been closed by making it compulsory to carry a wireless on fishing trawlers, which previously were exempt, although they are extremely liable to meet dangerous conditions at sea.

Surprise In Interest Of Conservative Leaders.

IT IS ONE of the phenomena of British policies that all these acts have been introduced by as conservative a government as you could hope to find. Which is explanation why the acts are not ambitious in the social service. They are evidence of the steady drift to the left which takes place in British political parties over a long period, in contrast to the drift to the right in individual politicians as they grow older.

The government's latest effort in social legislation has been found half-baked by many critics. The government has been worried for some time over the physical conditions of the people of England, particularly the children of the unemployed, the poor, and even the working classes. These children do not compare well with the children of the well-off and, therefore, well-fed.

The contrast is appalling in the distressed areas. The people of Lancashire have borne the brunt of the experiment of the industrial revolution, which had one of its homes there, and their physical condition shows it to this day. Distinction between the children is fairly easy, since the British education system is nicely stratified into three castes (although the borders between the castes are rather blurred): Elementary schools for the working classes; secondary schools for the middle classes (lower) and such of the brighter elementary school children as can be helped into them, and the public schools for the upper classes.

Sir John Orr estimated some time back that half the population of England would be better off physically for more and better food. And the root of the matter is poverty, although better conditions are not helped by the bad organization of our food supplies, which produces high prices and lack of variety, nor by the inability of the British people to cook well and make the most of their resources.

Army Recruits Found Underequipped Physically.

THE GOVERNMENT was troubled not out of altruism but because the army was finding it difficult to get recruits. The proportion of would-be recruits turned away for physical unfitness was so large the army had to pluck up its courage and enlist the unfit for a preliminary course of feeding up. And naturally enough it found that if you feed the unfit and clothe them properly you produce a very large proportion of fit.

The child of all this anguish is a bill to provide a sum of £2,000,000 to be spent over the next three years on physical training. A Labor M. P. proposed in the House that a free meal a day and free milk should be provided at government cost to all children in secondary and elementary schools. This was an unnecessarily wide proposal, since not all the children need assistance, but the government amendment was happy to deplore its socialist tendencies, and pass the buck to the local authorities. Since the latter have not the financial resources for the remedy, the proposal is killed as dead as if it had been deliberately voted down. And the government remains happy with its physical training school for instruction, its encouragement of playing fields, and exercises which may take the child's mind off its empty belly.

President Roosevelt's Civilian Conservation Corps will have to look to its laurels!

LaGuardia Urges Horrors Chamber Starring Dictators

New York, March 3 (AP).—Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia today urged that the 1939 World's Fair in New York should include a "chamber of horrors" featuring a European political leader.

Addressing 1,000 women at the American Jewish Congress, Mayor LaGuardia said he would use his influence in promoting the idea of a fair exhibit dedicated to religious freedom.

The mayor charged that Germany is seeking to destroy the peace of Europe and eventually the rest of the world because it "has nothing to lose."

Influence Denied By Oil Firm Head

By the Associated Press.

Government attorneys questioned Walter C. Teagle yesterday in an effort to determine whether the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey influenced a committee dealing with defaulted securities of the Colombian republic.

Teagle, president of the oil company, testified at a Securities Commission hearing that Standard Oil had no interest in activities of the committee, which has proposed to receive the defaulted securities and to issue securities of deposit while attempting collection.

It was brought out that these subsidiaries pay 10 per cent of all taxes collected by Colombia.

House UnitReports 2 Minor D. C. Bills

The House District Committee yesterday favorably reported two minor bills, referred several others to sub-committees, and decided not to call up the race track measure before March 22.

By reporting two bills, the committee brought the number of local measures on the House calendar to nine for consideration next Monday.

The two acted upon yesterday authorize an increase in the vocational rehabilitation appropriation from $15,000 to $25,000 and require that when coal or coke is sold in small packages it be in 15, 25 and 50-pound boys and be so designated.

Conservatives Seek Control of Council

London, March 3 (AP).—In undisputed command of the National government, the Conservative party's fight to win back control of the London county council from the Labor party meets the final test in voting tomorrow.

Climaxing a hotly contested campaign, more than 40 members of Parliament and 267 candidates made final appeals to an electorate of 2,053,000 people tonight.

U. S. Steel Unit Spent $289,462 In Labor Fight

Committee Is Told Bridge Firm Policed Project for 'Open Shop.'

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Civil Liberties Committee heard testimony yesterday the American Bridge Co., of Pittsburgh, spent $289,462 in 1931 and 1932 to combat labor trouble when payment of the union wage scale would have cost $51,849.

Curtis S. Garner, general manager of the bridge company, testified under questioning, that the concern spent the $289,462 to maintain its traditional "open shop" policy and a $1.75-an-hour scale for iron workers on the Pulaski highway construction job in Jersey City. The union scale was $2.

Ledger Sheets Shown.

Using files of the company, which is a subsidiary of U. S. Steel, Chairman La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, of the Civil Liberties Committee, said that the project required 207,396 skilled man-hours, which at 25 cents an hour more would have increased the labor cost $51,849. The construction contract, La Follette said, involved approximately $2,500,000.

He introduced company ledger sheets containing "labor trouble" expenditures, which included employment of armed guards, purchase of soft drinks and lunches for police patroling the project, and a donation of $350 to the Association of Chiefs of Police of New Jersey.

The committee also introduced evidence to show the bridge company had paid more to a guard accused of shooting a union man than it paid the victim of the shooting.

Shot on Bridge.

Edward Bergen was shot in November, 1931. A guard named Ralph Golden was charged with the shooting, but acquitted in March, 1934. Golden was in the employ of the Foster Detective Agency which the bridge company had retained to guard the project from union pickets.

Garner told the committee that Golden had been paid $5,600 by the company from the time of the shooting until December, 1935. Bergen sued the company for $100,000, but finally settled out of court for $4,000.

Bergen testified he was shot in the back after he had visited the Pulaski project to inspect the construction work and collect some money he had lent his friends among the workmen.

He said he was not a picket and there had been no rioting at the time. He was in the hospital 14 months, he said, dispossessed from his home, forced to withdraw two daughters from college and compelled to go on relief.

During much of this time, Garner said in response to questions, the company was paying Golden $50 a week "to keep him around in the neighborhood."

"Were you afraid he would jump his bail," La Follette asked.

"Well, you never know," Garner replied.

Capt. C. W. Early To Retire in May

Capt. Charles W. Early, now stationed at the Navy Department here, as a member of the Naval Examining Board, will retire about May 1, according to yesterday's Navy orders. He has been stationed here since 1934, making his home in Galax, Va.

Born in Carroll County, Va., Capt. Early was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1898 from Virginia. During the World War he served as engineering officer on the U. S. S. Pennsylvania, and later as executive officer on the U. S. S. New Mexico. He has commanded the U. S. S. Niagara, Brazos and Patoka. Previous tours of duty in Washington include service with the Bureau of Steam Engineering from 1919 to 1921, with Naval Operations from 1923 to 1926, and again from 1928 to 1930.

Previous to his present assignment he was stationed as Chief of Staff of the Commandant of the Sixteenth Naval District, Cavite, Philippines Islands, with additional duty as Assistant Commandant of the Cavite Navy Yard. Previous to that he was Commander of the South China Patrol.

2 Stellar Bazooka Quartets Join Entrants in Post Contest

Fifth Precinct Boys Club and Alexandria Boys Club Produce Latest Masters; Competition Also Picks Up in Band and Orchestra Groups.

Two of the best quartets of bazooka players yet heard will come to the big Bob Burns-Washington Post bazooka contest from the Fifth Precinct Boys Club and the Alexandria Boys Club, according to Lew Hall, who is now available to groups of boys and girls for bazooka instruction.

"It looks now as though the hottest competition in the entire contest will come from the quartets," Instructor Hall reports. "However, the bands and orchestras I've heard so far are mighty good and the competition in this classification will be stiff, too."

Saturday afternoon, Lew Hall will be at the Liggett store at the corner of Thirteenth and F streets northwest, between the hours of 3 and 4. All aspiring bazooka artists will find him at the bazooka counter ready to demonstrate how to get the most out of the instrument Bob Burns has made into radio history in the last year.

Yesterday afternoon Inspector Hall, who is a great trumpet player and has directed his own orchestra in years past, helped the boys at the Y. M. C. A. organize a band for entry in the contest. At least two or three smaller units will come from these bandsmen, Hall estimates.

"The best duo I've heard is from the Fifth Precinct Club," he says. "There are a couple boys down there who can really go to town with 'hot' arrangements."

Lew Hall says that the more popular tunes are best for the contest. Particularly adapted to harmony and smooth ensemble work are "Dinah," "Some of These Days" and other old songs and such tuneful favorites as "Anchors Aweigh."

A suggestion has been made that no cash prizes be awared for the winning groups of contestants, ranging from the bands and orchestras down to duos and trios—so. The Post will award merchandise prizes instead. Each boy in the winning groups will be able to choose from many items, such as flashlights, tennis racquets, school sets, sweaters, rain capes, roller skates, lanterns, baseball equipment, etc.

Don't forget the date—March 13. That is Saturday morning and the Palace Theater will be open in plenty of time for all contestants and spectators to be in and seated for the first number at 8:30 a. m. No admission will be charged, of course.

It's your show and your fun. Get a bazooka, learn to play a tune with two, three or more other boys or girls and try for one of the prizes.

Suspect Is Identified By Victim of Attack

Joseph Wilson, colored, 20, of Middleburg, Va., was identified yesterday as the youth who attempted to criminally attack and robbed Mary Mooney, 37, 600 block Elliott street northeast.

Miss Mooney was attacked February 21, at Kenilworth avenue and Ault place northeast while on the way to work. She said a colored man set upon her from behind, but she managed to beat him off. He escaped with her pocketbook containing $5.

Miss Mooney was taken to Casualty Hospital and treated for bruises and shock.

Labor Bill Approved.

Madison, Wis., March 3 (AP).—The Wisconsin Assembly, in four minutes and without debate, passed today a bill proposing treatment of labor disputes within the State in virtually the same way the Wagner Federal act deals with those affecting interstate commerce.

Bickford Asks Group to Fight For Police Bill

Prince Georges Leader Continues His Battle From Sickbed.

Recuperating at his home in Clinton, Md., from an operation for appendicitis, Hugh C. Bickford, leader in the fight for a politically independent police force, will appeal to the Prince Georges County Citizens Federation, at its meeting in Bladensburg, Md., tonight, to continue its demands in the State Senate.

Bickford's appeal will be included in a written report to the meeting.

The police bill, passed by the House Tuesday and now before the Senate, does not include the Federation's two major proposals—for a separate, nonpartisan board of police commissioners and for an experienced, nonresident police chief.

Bickford said last night that, with the exception of these two deficiencies, the bill as it stood was satisfactory.

He said he did not know exactly what procedure he would recommend, but declared he would urge the Federation to continue fighting for these two amendments.

The meeting will begin at 8 p. m. in the Bladensburg fire house.

Prominent Federal and State officials will speak at the dedication exercises for the new Federal postoffice at Upper Marlboro, Md., Sunday at 3 p. m.

Included on the program are Representative Stephen W. Gambrill, of the Fifth Maryland District; Smith W. Purdum, fourth assistant postmaster general, and Lansdale G. Sasscer, president of the State Senate. Sasscer will preside.

Sen. Norris Bemoans Sunshine on March 4

"The Lord," Senator Norris observed yesterday looking at the Weather Bureau's forecast of one of the brightest March 4's in history today, "must have let me down. That's all I can say."

The senior Senator from Nebraska was referring to his statement on rainy Inauguration Day, set January 20 as a result of Norris' lame duck amendment. Chided at that time, Norris said that "you can't charge this up to me; wait until you see what kind of a day March 4 is." After he found out what kind of a day it was to be Norris said the only course left to him now is "to think up some way to amend that weather."

2 Confess Holdup Reports to Police Were Just a Hoax

Two robberies that weren't robberies have been cleared by police in the past two days when the reported victims admitted perpetrating the crimes themselves.

Thomas D. Shipley, 4012 Third street northwest, a Capital Transit Co., bus operator, signed a confession at Police Headquarters yesterday that he robbed himself of $127 last Monday, at Wisconsin avenue and P street northwest.

Shipley was found bound to the driver's seat in the bus after he attracted attention by blowing the horn with his foot. Persistent questioning by detectives broke his reserve and he confessed the plot.

Police also arrested Bennie Williams, 21, Shipley's roommate. Both men will be charged with grand larceny, detectives stated.

Arlington Jury Sentences Bell For Auto Death

Term of 2½ Years Given for Fatal Injuries to Mrs. Cooley.

Gordon Bell was found guilty of involuntary manslaughter for the traffic death of Mrs. Jessie Cooley by a jury in Circuit Court yesterday.

The jury fixed the sentence at 2½ years in the State Penitentiary. Bell was released on $1,500 bond pending an appeal.

Attorney Amose C. Crounse, counsel for the defendant, moved that the verdict be set aside on grounds it was contrary to the law and evidence. Judge Walter T. McCarthy denied this, and Crounse noted an exception.

Bell was indicted at the February term of court for the death of Mrs. Cooley February 2.

Mrs. Cooley, with Mrs. Golden Dagger, was leaving the Clarendon Community House about midnight, February 1, when they were struck by an automobile allegedly operated by Bell. Mrs. Cooley died a few hours later. Investigation by Dr. W. C. Welburn, county coroner, revealed that Mrs. Cooley's death was caused by skull injuries.

Flood relief contributions to the Arlington County Chapter Red Cross have reached approximately $3,500 according to a statement from George A. Collier, chairman, last night.

Samuel M. Lauderdale, safety engineer of the CCC, and John Galleher, Democratic candidate for attorney general of Virginia, subject to the primary, will be guest speakers at the meeting of the Young Democratic Club Monday night. The meeting will be at the Lee Tavern.

Nice Requests Added Power For Md. Police

Asks Munshower, Be Given Full Control Over Department..

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 3.—The Senate State Police investigate committee began a review of the evidence tonight, after hearing Gov. Harry W. Nice brand as "absolutely and utterly unfounded" all charges made in testimony "as they apply to me."

After a four-minute committee conference with the Governor in his reception room in the State House, earlier in the day, Senator John D. C. Duncan, Baltimore County, committee Chairman, said:

"The inquiry has ended, unless something unforeseen turns up. We feel that we have sufficient data upon which to base a report to the Senate as a whole to justify such remedies as we will at the proper time suggest. We hope to have our report completed by Monday night or Tuesday morning."

Senator Duncan said the committee would report at an executive session of the Senate. He declined to discuss his views on the inquiry or any recommendations the committee may have in mind until the report has been filed.

Only a few persons were present today when the committee met Gov. Nice. The meeting had by agreement been closed to all but members of the Legislature and members of the press. The Governor after greeting the committee membe . read the following statement:

"You have asked me to give you my views concerning what should be done to bring order and re-establish discipline in the Maryland State Police Force.

"My answer is that I have selected as superintendent a gentleman of outstanding reputation and unquestioned ability. That selection has met with spontaneous and widespread approval. That you gentlemen of the Senate have the most implicit confidence in Maj. Munshower (Elmer F. Munshower, of Frederick) is evidence by the fact that you have unanimously confirmed his appointment.

"Therefore, it follows, in my opinion, that if you give him authority comparable to that now vested in the Police Commissioner for Baltimore City, and an increase in the personnel sufficient to properly patrol the highways of Maryland, Maj. Munshower will work out his own destiny and bring the Maryland State Constabulary to the highest degree of efficiency it has ever known."

Parks to Shelter 25,000 Boy Scouts

The Interior Department custodian of the Capital's parks yesterday disclosed plans under which thousands of Boy Scouts will take them over this summer for national jamboree purposes.

With 25,000 expected to come here for the ten-day conclave beginning June 30, Boy Scouts will be encamped in the Washington Monument Grounds, in East and West Potomac Parks, on Columbia Island, the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway at the Agriculture Department's experimental farm adjoining Arlington Cemetery.

It will be necessary to decommission the nine-hole practice golf course in West Potomac Park, nine holes of the East Potomac course and eight baseball diamonds. C. Marshall Finnan, parks superintendent, explained, however, that camps erected on recreational layouts given up to the khaki-clad horde will be the last to go up and and the first to come down.

The Ellipse will not be used for camping, as was planned when the jamboree was originally scheduled to be held here in 1935. An outbreak of infantile paralysis in Washington and vicinity forced its postponement.

Death of Mrs. Trader Leaves Husband's Slaying Unsolved

Inquiry Will Continue in Murder of Utilities Operator, Prosecutor Announces as Principal Suspect in Case Dies After Operation.

By the Associated Press.

Salisbury, Md., March 3.—One of the Eastern Shore's most baffling murder mysteries, "the Trader case," reached an abrupt and unexpected impasse today with the death in a Salisbury hospital of Mrs. Jeanette B. Trader, charged with her husband's slaying.

Her death, following close on an operation for an intestinal obstruction, left the circumstances of the fatal shooting of Clarence J. Trader unexplained to the full satisfaction of either the defense or prosecution.

Prosecuting attorneys of Wicomico and Worcester counties late today ordered a postmortem examination and an inquest into the death of Mrs. Trader. The inquest was set for 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Trader, wealthy Stockton utilities operator, was found dead in his estranged wife's home January 14. A special grand jury later indicted Mrs. Trader for his first-degree murder, despite her contention he killed himself.

Inquiry to Continue.

State's Attorney Thomas F. Johnson, of Worcester County, head of the Trader investigating forces, expressed personal regret at the death of the principal, but announced: "We will continue our investigation."

Defense Attorney John L. Sanford asserted the defense "had sufficient evidence which would have acquitted Mrs. Trader" at her trial scheduled later this month.

Mrs. Trader, attractive 37-year-old mother of three children, complained of being ill last week and was removed from the Worcester County Jail at Snow Hill to Wicomico County's "pent-house" jail here.

Poison Report Disclaimed.

State's Attorney Johnson said physicians' reports refuted allegation Mrs. Trader was served poisoned food in her Snow Hill cell.

"One of her sons told me Mrs. Trader had undergone 27 different operations," Johnson asserted, holding her death in the Peninsula General Hospital resulted from complications arising from a previous operation.

Dr. J. McFadden Dick, the operating surgeon, informed Chief Judge Benjamin A. Johnson, who would have presided at the Trader trial, that the operation he performed on the defendant yesterday showed her "abdominal cavity was a mass of adhesions."

The State's attorney indicated the death of the principal did not change the status of Samuel A. Smith, of Pungoteague, Va., who is free under $500 bond as a material witness in the slaying. Mrs. Trader's arrest followed long questioning of Smith by investigators.

Family Is Prominent.

The finding of Trader's body precipitated the most spectacular investigation the Eastern Shore has seen in the last two years. The prominence of the family, the reputed wealth of Trader, and previous relations between Trader and his wife contributed to interest in the case.

The utilities owner, a former preacher, was arrested last fall for attacking his wife. He countered by suing her for divorce, naming Smith as a co-respondent. The divorce suit was pending at the time of his death.

Mrs. Trader remained at the family home in Stockton and Trader moved a few doors away. Mrs. Trader told police that, on the night of the shooting, her husband asked to spend the night at her home. She said she went up stairs and locked her door. Later, she said, she heard a shot, and found him dying in an adjoining room.

At Annapolis, Gov. Harry W. Nice tonight directed Charles Butler, State director of welfare, to contact the Worcester County authorities and to conduct an investigation in the death of Mrs. Trader, if the authorities gave their permission.

The discovery of the body of Trader in the home of his estranged wife the night of January 14 precipitated the most spectacular investigation the Eastern Shore has seen in the last two years.

The prominence of the principals, the reputed wealth of Trader, and previous relations between the man and his wife all contributed to interest in the case.

Was Former Preacher.

Trader, former preacher, owned the electric light plant at Stockton, Md., where he lived. Last fall he was arrested for shooting at his wife. He countered by suing her for divorce, naming a corespondent. Both of these court cases, the assault charge and the divorce suit, were pending at the time of his death.

Mrs. Trader remained in the family home at Stockton, while Trader moved out. Mrs. Trader told police that on the night of the shooting, she and her husband visited several taverns, then returned to her home. She said her husband wanted to spend the night. She went upstairs. Later, she said, she heard a shot in an adjoining room and rushed in to find him dying.

After several weeks of investigation she was arrested on a murder charge and indicted. She maintained he killed himself.

Police said they learned through a "lie detector" that the corespondent in the divorce suit had bought a pistol similar to the one which killed Trader.

Miss Ames Asks Divorce.

Los Angeles, March 3 (AP).—Reconciliation attempts of Adrienne Ames, screen actress, and Bruce Cabot, actor, reached an unsuccessful finale today when she filed suit for divorce.

Dickstein Crosses Dopesters, Baroness Testifies at Inquiry

Fern Andra Tells Hearing on Alien Actors of Restrictions on Americans in Germany and England.

Deftly crossing all the dopesters, the latest entry of Representative Samuel Dickstein (Democrat), New York, in the "Dickstein Witness Sweepstakes" yesterday turned out to be a German baroness who is neither German nor a baroness.

The Dickstein Witness Sweepstakes is a new sporting event in the Nation's Capital, in which reporters and House members endeavor to guess what type of witness Representative Dickstein will call next to testify on his bill to bar foreign stage and screen stars from this country.

All advance information, based on past performance, had pointed toward a trio of acrobats as the next entries, with the testimony to come from the chandeliers, where the acrobats were to hang by their knees. Paddock dope, however, changed this with the flash that the House Immigration Committee has no chandeliers.

Tibbett a Witness.

Previous witnesses ranged from Lawrence Tibbett, Walter Damrosch and Jean Hersholt to a concert manager, who charged big opera companies demand "a cut" from their stars; burlesque theater owners who denounced the influx of foreign "strip-tease gals" as a threat to their "meat shows;" and a singer who asserted opera is a "racket."

Yesterday, the Baroness Fern Andra, formerly Fern Andrews, of Waiseka, Ill.; formerly the wife of Ian Keith, the movie star, and formerly a child star in foreign stage and film productions, appeared. She is an honorary baroness and still an American citizen, she said, there being no Baron Andra.

The baroness, brown-eyed, raven-haired, wearing a black caracul fur coat, a slanted black velvet beret and pink suede gloves, with a slave bracelet on the calf of her leg, related to the sympathetic committee how she was harassed by police in London and Berlin during her career.

Reported Each Week.

Because of British laws she had to report to the Bow street police station in London once a week while making films there, and in wartime she had to report twice daily to a Berlin police station, she said. She backed the bill as a retaliatory measure against the German law barring all foreign-born actors from working in Germany, and told of her fruitles correspondence with Herr Joseph Goebbels, Nazi propaganda minister.

"Goebbels, hey?" said Dickstein. "He's my friend—yeah!"

Baroness Andra said most of her German-made films were censored in Germany and citizens there of less than 18 years of age were not permitted to see them. The committee did not explore this point further.

Other witnesses included Evelyn Brant, representing the Grand Opera Association, who spoke highly of the bill and flayed the press for presenting "only the opposition arguments to this bill," and Miss Agnes Cronin, assistant in the WPA theater projects, who testified about 12,500 actors were out of work last September in the United States.

Odds on the acrobats to appear next week have lowered invitingly, but reporters, repeatedly outguessed by Chairman Dickstein, now lean more toward a seal act, last night's consensus showed.

William H. Humiston Succumbs at Home

William H. Humiston died at his home today, 3206 Nineteenth street northwest, after a long illness. A native of New Haven, Conn., he came to Washington in 1884 and had been associated with the firm of Arthur Burt & Co. for the last 42 years. He was a member of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Funeral arrangements have not been announced.

YOUR GUIDE TO GOOD LIQUORS

Favored Films, Feature Plays, To Make Week

'On Your Toes' Brings Hit Musical to National; Other Programs.

Opening Monday night in the National Theater, the attraction will be Dwight Deere Wiman's production of the Broadway musical comedy success, "On Your Toes," in which the stellar role is played by Ray Bolger, supported by Luella Gear and Tamara Geva. Others of importance in the cast include Doris Carson and Monty Woolley, former instructor of drama at Yale University. The book of this travesty on the art of the ballet—and incidentally, embodying something of all dance forms—was written by Richard Rodgers, Lorenz Hart and George Abbott, with Rodgers and Hart also providing the musical score of the piece. The engagement is for one week only, with matinees, as usual, on Wednesday and Saturday.

At the Belasco Theater next week, beginning with a Sunday night performance, March 7, the offering will be Elsie Schauffler's play of "Parnell," presented by James W. Savage. Albert Van Dekker and Leona Powers, formerly leading woman with the National Theater Players, head the cast. They will be supported by an ensemble of distinction, led by Franklin Gray, Alexander F. Frank, Edmond O'Brien, Harry Redding, Ralph Culinan, Allan Lee, Pamela Simpson, John Morley, Herbert Duffy, Virginia Gately and numerous others. Stewart Chaney's original settings and costumes will decorate the play. There will be the customary matinees on Thursday and Saturday.

Grace Moore, foremost of the cinema's divas, will be the pictured star at the Earle Theater for the week beginning tomorrow in "When You're in Love," a new Columbia Pictures production in which she will be co-starred with Cary Grant. In this subject, Miss Moore will be heard in a series of songs a little different from those she has sung in earlier screen hits, among them Cab Calloway's "Minnie the Moocher," Puccini's "Vissi Darte" and Verdi's waltz aria from "Romeo and Juliet." Schubert's "Serenade," "In the Gloaming," "Siboney" and two new songs especially written by Jerome Kern and Dorothy Fields are among other numbers that will be sung by the star. Lester Cole and His Midshipmen will headline the vaudeville bill, which also will include Cardini, the card manipulator; the Lathrop Brothers and Virginia Lee, dancers, and the Unique Walkmirs.

As already announced in this space yesterday, the next attraction on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, beginning tomorrow, will be "Maid of Salem," the new Paramount production, costarring Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray, supported by a distinguished cast that includes Louise Dresser, Harvey Stephens, E. E. Clive, William Farnum, Benny Bartlett, Ivan Simpson, Beulah Bondi, Virginia Weidler, Bonita Granville, Edward Ellis, Pedro de Cordoba, Gale Sondergaard, Sterling Holloway, Donald Meek and a long list of others. On the stage there will be introduced a new personality as master of ceremonies in the person of "Red" Skelton, described as a young man of unusual charm and versatility. He will have on the bill with him Jack Powell, percussionist; the Four Kraddocks, Jay and Lou Seiler, Sue Ryan, Marilyn Marlowe and Talbert Haslett.

Heralded as one of the most spectacular productions of the current season, "The Soldier and the Lady," adapted from Jules Verne's story of "Michael Strogoff," will have its first local showings on the screen at the RKO-Keith Theater, beginning next Wednesday, March 10. Margot Grahame and Elizabeth Allen have the principal feminine roles, with Akim Tamiroff, Fay Bainter and Eric Blore cast in parts of pivotal importance. The current attraction at Keith's is "When's Your Birthday?" reviewed on this page today.

"Green Light," the Warner Brothers' splendid picturization of Floyd C. Douglas' best-selling novel of the same name, will resume its downtown run at the Metropolitan Theater tomorrow for an engagement of one week. The principal roles are played with superlative effect by Errol Flynn, Anita Louise, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Margaret Lindsay and Walter Abel.

As was to have been expected, "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's highly polished picturization of the stage play by Frederic Lonsdale, will be continued for a second week on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater, beginning tomorrow. The stellar roles are played by Joan Crawford, William Powell and Robert Montgomery, with a sterling cast in support.

For the week beginning tomorrow, the Columbia Theater announces a repeat engagement of "Love Is News," the sprightly comedy in which the foremost roles are taken by Loretta Young, Don Ameche and Tyrone Power. "Slim" Summerville, Walter Catlett, Dudley Digges, Jane Darwell and Stepin Fetchit lead the supporting cast.

"Cloistered," the unique picturization of activities behind the walls of a French nunnery, reviewed by this department yesterday, will continue the feature of the bill throughout the current week at the Rialto Theater. It is supported by a varied array of sport-reel subjects.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel," starring Leslie Howard, with Merle Oberon and a notable cast, continues the attraction at the Little Theater until Sunday. The play deals picturesquely with events of the French Revolution.

Jacques Cartier, American dancer well-known on Broadway and in Hollywood, will present his ballet-narrative, "The Grand Monarch," tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 in the grand ballroom of the Willard Hotel. He will be assisted at the piano by Mary Morley.

"The Kellys and O'Days" will be the attraction at the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with next Sunday's usual matinee performance. Curley and Sally will head the cast, with Jack Diamond, the "King of Floogie Street" in the principal comedy role.

Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops

New Trans-Lux Theater, for News Reels, Shorts, Will Be Previewed on Night of Thursday, March 11

Invitations Are Out for Buffet Dinner and Later Inspection of the New House at Fourteenth Street, New York Avenue and H Street; Mr. Cochran Will Entertain Former Leading Woman of National Theater Players on Sunday Afternoon—Here With 'Parnell.'

IT BEGINS to look very much as if the new Trans-Lux Theater, extending along Fourteenth street from New York avenue to H street, would open in the near future, outside appearances to the contrary, notwithstanding.

BELL.

The drama desk yesterday received a handsomely embossed invitation from the Trans-Lux Washington Corporation to attend a private showing of its new Trans-Lux Theater Thursday evening, March 11, at 9 o'clock. Accompanying the invitation was a card bidding us to a buffet dinner on the same evening to be served in the Rose Room of the Hotel Washington from 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

This is all a very merry prospect. In the first place, it will serve to bring Roland Robbins, one of the most popular theater managers Washington ever had, back in the days when two-a-day vaudeville flourished and B. F. Keith's was one of the mightiest citadels of that form of entertainment on the continent, back to the local managerial fold as major domo of the new house. Secondly, it will introduce to the National Capital a form of screen entertainment of which it heretofore has been bereft, although it has prospered in other major cities in the East and Middle West.

The invitation to the "preview" of the theater states that on the inaugural program "headline news films and movie short subjects, as shown in Trans-Lux Theaters, will be supplemented with films of current world news chosen especially for the occasion." That all sounds interesting, novel and promising of something a little different on Washington's habitual motion picture menu.

There is always a doubt in the lay mind that a theater will be able to open on the date and at the hour which it announces. Having been in on a large number of these formal dedications in a past incarnation, I may state with some authority—I hope—that no playhouse at 4 o'clock in the afternoon ever looks as if it could open at 8:30 or 9 that night. But they always do. By some miracle of superhuman effort, slave-driving and tricky manipulation the given house always is ready when the customers, or the invited guests, begin to pile in.

To be sure, a great deal of the rubbish may be broomed under the carpets, not all of the seats may be screwed down and, perhaps, the screen may be only a blank, white-washed wall, but they always open when they say they will. I never have known it to fail.

So when you drive, or walk, past the new Trans-Lux and notice all of those workmen still puffing away at their jobs, do not fear that Mr. Robbins and his associates are speaking out of turn. If they say the house will be ready for inspection on the night of March 11, it will be ready.

* * * *

When "Parnell" comes to the Belasco Theater on Sunday night for a week's engagement, the principal feminine role will be played by Leona Powers, one of the most popular leading women the National Theater Players, under the management of Stephen E. Cochran, ever had. In celebration of the return to the Capital of his former leading woman, Mr. Cochran is tossing a cocktail party in her honor in his National Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. There will be in attendance at this time, of course, John McKee and Addison Pitt, codirectors of the institution, and two of the most capable stage directors in the contemporary theater. In this connection, it is worth noing that the Saturday night performances of the students of the academy are of sufficient merit to bear further testimony of the worth of this school of stage training both to the Capital and to the theater. Many of its graduates have gone on to Broadway and careers of promise on the stage.

Jack Powell, that extraordinary drummer and percussionist who can find the means of syncopation on anything from a kitchen stove to a pair of shoes, returns to Washington as a featured member of the stage bill at Loew's Capitol Theater which, beginning tomorrow, will introduce "Red" Skelton to local theatergoers as a "different" sort of master of ceremonies.

Jack is a lad who doesn't care whether he has a drum to beat on or not. He can get rhythm out of anything. Furthermore, he is one of the precious few public entertainers who takes the trouble to thank his reviewers for good notices. I have never known it to fail that during, or upon the conclusion of, one of his engagements he sits down and writes to those who have approved of his efforts. His letters are the "critics' round of applause," as my old friend, Hobart Bosworth, denominates it.

If the newly arrived "Red" cannot have fun with Jack, he cannot have fun with anyone. That would be too bad.

* * * *

And in passing it may be remarked that that assiduous young publicist of the Loew organization in Washington, Ray Bell—no relation—has not yet stopped sending around those red reminders that "Red" is coming. Yesterday it was a red notebook, in which we are supposed to jot down all of the pleasant things we can think of about the guy. There is no stopping this J. Raymond fellow. And who wants to stop him? Some of his trinkets are useful. For example, I can use the little red book for convenient telephone numbers.

* * * *

To vary the monotony of acting one play for an extended period, Burgess Meredith and Peggy Ashcroft, who are featured in the Guthrie McClintic production of Maxwell Anderson's "High Tor," are organizing a group of the younger members of their company and Katharine Cornell's "Wingless Victory" to study other plays. Though no public performances will be given, the young actors will rehearse two or three dramas exactly as though preparing them for a first-night opening. That's ambition for you!

BILLY GRADY, casting director for M. G. M., resigned last week as the result of a practical joke. For a long time he had been ribbing Spencer Tracy, who detests getting up early, by ordering him to report on the set in make-up at 8 a. m. Tracy would arrive, sleepy-eyed—only to find that the company wasn't shooting that day. Some weeks ago Grady phoned Tracy at 3 a. m. and ordered him to report at San Pedro at 7 a. m. for a location call. Again Tracy bit—and again Grady had his laugh . . . Two weeks ago Grady phoned Tracy and said it was most important for him to appear on the set at 9 a. m. Tracy laughed knowingly and kept right on sleeping. Grady phoned again and again, but received no answer . . . That call was genuine, and while the company overhead mounted, Grady spent all morning trying to convince Tracy he wasn't kidding this time . . . Louis B. Mayer heard the story, and in the resultant blow-off Grady quit.

The entertainers, direct from Broadway, were provided with transportation and presented with a week's board at the Roney—all for doing a 3-minute turn. And the show grossed less than $2,000.

The Troublemakers in Baikie

So here we have Patsy, the mongrel pooch, impounded for nonpayment of dog tax and his irascible and garrulous mistress, Honoria Flanagan, both residents of the little town of Baikie in Scotland, in the Theater Guild's new comedy of "Storm Over Patsy," current at the National.

Astrology, Boxing Bouts Mix In Latest Joe E. Brown Picture

By Nelson B. Bell.

"WHEN'S YOUR BIRTHDAY?" RKO-Radio picturization of a play by Fred Ballard, adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates, Malcolm Stuart Boylan and Samuel L. Pike, starring Joe E. Brown, with Marian Marsh, Fred Keating, Edgar Kennedy, Maude Eburne, Suzanne Kaaren, Margaret Hamilton, Minor Watson, Frank Jenks, Don Rowan, Granville Bates, Charles Judels and Corky, the dog actor. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Reviewed at RKO-Keith's Wednesday afternoon.

It is an episodic sort of comedy that we have here, dedicated solely to the genial purpose of laughter, with Joe E. Brown, the star, participating in a series of hilarious sequences that cover a vast expanse of comic enterprises.

The play is built in a succession of sequences that depict a young astrologer in the throes of a variety of manifestations of his deep-seated knowledge of the constellations, the signs of the zodiac and the influence of the planets upon the careers of men—and women. It moves with occasionally retarded swiftness to a boxing-bout climax that is a little different from the sort of fisticuffing that Jimmy Cagney, Jimmy Dunn, Maxie Baer and Primo Carnera have previously brought to the screen. It is much funnier than any of them.

Joe is discovered, first, stretched out on a rubbing table in his dressing room, having just been knocked cold in a ring battle from which he recovers after the mere matter of a quarter of an hour. The introduction to this "entrance" is unique. It consists of a natural color cartoon sequence in which the symbols of the zodiac take part in a battle that is as unusual as it is amusing. Joe is labeled with the sign of Taurus, the bull, and the moon has to be just right before he can hope for success in anything he undertakes.

The action proceeds with varying degrees of vigor through his service as a bus boy in a swanky night club, a swami in an amusement pier fortune telling establishment, a clairvoyant serving in the office of a sure-thing gambler and as a prizefighter, when his own horoscope is mistaken for that of the "Salvador Slayer" and he is tossed into the prize ring with the middleweight champion of the world about a half hour before the planets are propitious.

It seemed to me yesterday afternoon that the funniest incident in the entire picture was the one in which Joe and his scraggly pup, Zodiac, having only that minute been tossed out of a home of wealth on their respectives ears, sit on the curbstone and bay the rising moon. It must be said that Joe, with that cavernous maw of his, rather outbays his dog.

There is a competent cast in support of the star in this subject, led by Marian Marsh, who is infrequently seen of late; Fred Keating, the former prestidigator, who does a little of his hocus-pocus at the garden party; Edgar Kennedy, whose hats have a tough time of it, along with his pipe, and occasion him many opportunities to reveal his proficiency as an exponent of the "slow burn;" Maude Eburne, Suzanne Kaaren, Margaret Hamilton, Minor Watson, former member of the National Theater Players in this city; Frank Jenks, one of the cinema's tough eggs; Don Rowan, Granville Bates, Charles Judels and that exceptional canine actor, Corky, who plays the role of Zodiac with uncanny comic skill.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDDLER

Hollywood, March 3. — Settin' Around (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer): I always think of this studio as the "needles and pins" lot. Because everybody moves and acts as if on needles and pins. This is due to the preponderance of important stars, many with highly inflammable tempers. For a minor employe to upset a big star—especially if just before an important scene — is for that employe to write his own ticket of dismissal.

CLARK GABLE.

It is astonishing to see an office of laughing, chattering people turn suddenly quiet and businesslike when certain stars barge into sight. And, for goodness' sake, you should see the guilty blushes when a little group is putting one of these stars on the pan and the actor or actress suddenly arrives in their midst. You could fry eggs on burning faces!

On the "Parnell" set, I watched Clark Gable die. There is something eerie about studio death scenes, even though you know they are unreal. Faces that are bright at other times lose their smiles and lengthen when an actor is being photographed in death's grip. And if you like happy endings by the way, I fear Gable's demise at the finish of "Parnell" may leave an acid taste in your mouth.

Nevertheless, filming of these scenes had an amusing anticlimax. For two days previous to today, the director had been tediously filming this dramatic death sequence. In order to create the proper mood and make it easier for Clark to simulate dying, a string orchestra played funeral dirges. "And believe me," Gable said, "after listening to funeral dirges for a few hours, my mood certainly went sad." At any rate, they finally got the death scene this morning. As the cameras ceased to roll the director gave a signal and the orchestra burst into "I'll Be Glad When You're Dead, You Rascal You." The gag broke up the entire company; nobody could work without laughing for the next half hour.

While on the Gable subject, I must not forget his amusing crack in the studio cafe at noon. At our table sat big Pat Moriarity, who stowed away a huge luncheon. Clark is a man-sized eater himself, but his eyes widened at the volume of food consumed by Pat. Moriarity noticed this, and groaned, "I don't know what's wrong with me. I've lost my appetite." "Let's hope some extra doesn't find it," Gable snapped. "It would keep him broke trying to feed it until the owner showed up."

Before I get out of the lunchroom there is a little tale to tell on Harpo Marx. He dined next table to ours, and opposite him sat Gloria Swanson, who can be the most interesting woman in the world—when she wants to be. Today she was evidently in the mood, because Harpo was so engrossed that the confused blonde waitress who hovered about waiting for their order was getting no attention at all. At last she mustered courage to murmer, "We're having nice weather today, Mr. Marx."

"Is zat so?" answered Harpo, with barely a glance at the girl. "Bring us some."

Margaret Lindsay arrived on the "Song of the City" set in a hot-zigity-dog decolette gown that was greeted with ohs and ahs. Studio head man Louis B. Mayer, visiting on the set, commented, "Well, Margaret, I'm sure that dress will please the men."

An Abstruse and Profound Motion Picture Proves That Movie Public Has Assumed an Adult Stature

'Green Light,' a Play of Serious Import Makes New Box-Office Records at Both the Earle and Ambassador Theaters;

IT is a matter of considerable gratification and one of the phenomena of the current cinema that "Green Light" has been going as well as it has at the Earle and Ambassador Theaters.

Our fear was expressed in Saturday morning's review of the picture that it would prove too abstruse, too philosophical and too profound for the common run of "movie" patrons. This seems to have been a fear that was totally without substantial foundation. There has been nothing in the history of this picture to indicate that it has scared over the heads of its audiences. This is a fine sign.

BELL.

If a photoplay as subtle in its suggestions, as powerful in the culmination of its climaxes and as memorable in its fidelity to the authentic facts of life can impress itself upon public consciousness as "Green Light" has done, then there is no fear for the mental cosocity of the contemporary motion picture audience.

It has been the contention of this column for months—and maybe years—on end that the capacity of the movie-going public to assimilate the best things of literature and the drama was being tremendously underestimated.

The career of "Green Light" seems to bear out this contention. Here is a play that is not simple, not translucent, not immediately comprehensible to the flippant mind. Yet it has achieved one of the most profitable runs of recent months, not only at the Earle, but at the Ambassador, where it piled up grosses that have not been seen at the corner of Eighteenth and Columbia road for weeks on end.

All of this adds up, of course, to the final conclusion that motion picture audiences are growing up and have a fine appreciation of the better things that the cinema has to offer.

"Green Light" certainly is one of the best of them.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, March 3.

ALICE HUGHES.

WITH LENT drawing to its inevitable close, the Broadway theater nears the end of its appointed tether. Twenty new shows are hoped for, but not definitely promised, during March and April — after which Thespis moves to the nearby reformed cow barns of Connecticut, where she will try out new plays for the coming season.

The great Theater Guild, having run out of Lunts and Fontannes for the year, has another show to do—this time a thrilling dog comedy which has to do with an unpaid dog—certainly a novel dramatic subject. Helen Deutsch, the press agent, had a field day trying to sign the proper pooch, and finally settled on a shaggy mongrel named "Colonel," who got his picture in the papers together with lovely Claudia Morgan, the daughter of the clever Frank, and who has a speaking role in the opus. Thus it will take a "Colonel" to brighten what looks like a dull spring in Times Square.

• • • •

We shall have, of course, some performances of Shaw's "Candida" by the wide-eyed Cornell, and they'll be well worth visiting. And we are definitely promised something from California called "Sun-Kissed"—oddly enough, not a satire on the movie people. We've had more than enough of those in the theater, good as some of the shows have been.

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Speaking of "Victoria," little Helen Hayes is still determined to shut up that spanking hit and go to London in time for the Coronation. The show could probably run all summer if little Mrs. McArthur didn't have such a whim of iron! Even so, that's a hard baby to play, and she's earned a rest . . .

• • • •

Speaking of the ceremonial crowning of George, I hear they've already closed the greater part of Westminster Abbey to prepare the great old fane for the glamorous affair. Normally seating 2,500, the abbey will get three additional tiers of wooden seats for the occasion. Wonderful how the obscure peeresses turn up for this imperial show, which happens so rarely! . . .

• • • •

Now they're hunting frantically for a movie name to replace Margaret Sullavan when Mrs. Heyward retires from the cast of "Stage Door" to have her baby. At the moment of rushing to press, the two mentioned most often are Janet Gaynor and Joan Bennett. Either would be a fair choice, according to this reporter. But Sullavan is swell in the part and will really be hard to replace . . .

• • • •

Who remembers Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, as pretty a lass as ever faced a jury? You may be interested to know that Evelyn is still earning her living as a cabaret entertainer here and about. At present she's working at a place called Flynn's over in Brooklyn, and getting, they say, $175 a week, which is not soy beans. The girl is still pretty, for all the 30 years that have rolled away since the notorious Thaw trial. Her big son, Russell Thaw, is one of the country's leading transport air pilots, O tempora! O fugit!

• • • •

Ladies' fancy pick-me-ups at the end of a hard day are not the sort fancied by father, either. Gracie Allen, who struggles before the camera and mike, fancies a warm body massage at the day's end. Greta Nissen favors eau de cologne, while Kate Smith, bless her poundage, likes a piping five-minute bath, followed by a honey mask. And what a beautiful skin Kate has, to be sure!

Even a movie ad can trip you if you're not quite certain of your speech. Do you make the mistake of announcing that "ROmance PerFERRED" is playing at the LYEseum THEAYter? Of course there will be raised eyebrows. You should say "RoMANCE PriFERRED" at the LySEEum THEAter.

Do you read headlines this way: GUVmunt Men Trap AILEEJD Robbers. MuniSIPal LIEberry Burns. It's just as easy to correctly sound the "ern" syllable in Government, say alLEJD for alleged, muNISipal for municipal, LIEbrari for library.

Do the department store ads stump you? Or can you smoothly say "sheek akSESoriz" for chic accessories, "SHIFon negliZHAY" for chiffon negligee, "BOOdwhr" for boudoir, "boLAYro" for bolero.

Veils of Varying Lengths Used To Supply Touch of Romance

Hindu, Persian and Russian Influences Provide Inspiration for New Modes in Headgear for Spring Season.

By Ethel Ehlen,

Post Fashion Editor.

THIS is a season of romance and femininity and the ubiquitous turban is one of the best exponents of these popular trends. Turbans are appearing in countless versions—tailored to accompany suits and daytime frocks, feminized for afternoon and evening. Some of the turbans are complete hats, others are scarcely more than a bandeau to encircle the coiffure. They are also fashioned of everything from straw and sheer woolens to rich Hindu and Persian brocades and prints.

Veils Add Romance.

To add romance to an otherwise simple turban of straw, many designers are adding veils of varying lengths. Some of these dashing veils reach just to the nose, others are of the "fly-away" variety, extending out from the hat, and some completely cover the turban and extend down to the shoulders of the wearer. You can change the entire character of your costume by a mere addition of an alluring veil.

Many sources have furnished inspiration for the 1937 turban—Hindu and Persian, a new London play with a Russian atmosphere and the usual spring presentation of small hats to add dash to the mid-season costume. The picturesque methods of dressing the hair are also in harmony with the turban. For the halo-like coiffures, turbans are a "natural."

For Afternoon Wear.

With afternoon costumes, whether they are untrimmed or accented with lingerie touches, the turban is the smart and feminine topping. For such affairs they are fashioned of soft materials, smartly draped and worn back on the head. The majority of turbans are adorned, depending upon the manipulation of the material for chic effect. However, other versions are given an added bit of chic by jeweled or brilliant-colored plastic ornaments.

For summer, daytime and resort wear, the crownless turbans will be much in evidence. Some of these are materials with intricate draping, others consist of several chiffon scarfs simply wound around the head and either tied or knotted at the front or back. Experts are suggesting several large "kerchiefs," twisted or braided and worn as a turban in lieu of a hat—for daytime and evening, depending upon the material. Flower turbans are making their appearance for the Easter season; the Scheherezade turban promises to be extremely popular, and the halo turban will undoubtedly usurp the fashion "headlines," come spring.

Pleasant Homes.

An Eye to Color And Sunshine

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"SHE WAS so lucky to have a dining room flooded with sun and with such grand views outdoors," exclaimed Ethel Howard after a week-end spent with her husband's partner's son's new wife.

As Ethel described the room to us, it sounded as if that bride had a way with colors and curtains as well as with a nice young man. It was a corner room in the first place with wide double windows on two sides which looked out on a yard filled with trees and shrubs . . . even in winter the view had a bleak charm about it, so you can imagine what it would be like in summer.

The walls are papered in yellow with a small medallion in white, and the windows had yellow curtains tied back in very wide swoops as each pair of windows was treated as a single wide window in order to make the yard as much a part of the room as possible. Under one of the windows was a love seat in a crisp fresh light green slip cover and under the other one was one of those narrow long library tables in walnut. This was used for a serving table, and between meals it held a pitcher and water glasses, along with some other pieces of glass, in yellows, ambers and greens with an odd piece or two in flame color. Sunlight fairly made that glass glitter! It contributed the most delightful bright pattern to the room. The rug was a machine-made hooked design copied after a beautiful old Cape Cod block pattern—and a walnut open shelf cupboard held pieces of copper, plates of green, some square scenic platters, a row of cups of rust pottery. The walnut draw top dining table and ladder back walnut chairs with rush seats completed the furnishings of the room . . . for a centerpiece, Ethel said, the bride used a low green pottery bowl with unusual copper pitchers on either side of it.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Effect of Diets on Blood Pressure.

WHY IT IS that blood pressure has, of all chronic diseases, been so often ascribed to the influence of diet, I do not know, but so it is. The latest studies show not altogether similar results. But at least it is a complete review. All the dietary articles which can influence anything are (1) meat and protein, (2) fats, (3) carbohydrates, (4) salt and other minerals, (5) total bulk, (6) roughage and (7) water.

Meat—A German investigator, Saile, examined 110 monks who had lived on an exclusively vegetable diet and recorded their blood pressures, comparing with 115 monks who included meat in their diet. In comparison, the vegetarian monks revealed a distinctly lower blood pressure. This finding keeps bobbing up all the time. But there are too many investigations on the other side to allow its acceptance. Thomas, for instance, in a whole tribe of Eskimos, exclusive meat-eaters, found that the average blood pressure was no different from other people.

Fat—Some observers feel that fat has a blood-pressure raising principle. As compared to meat, for instance, Klinefelter, working on groups of people who were known to be extensive consumers of one kind of an article of diet, found that 83 of those who had high blood pressure were meat eaters, but then 78 were extensive fat eaters. From this is would look as if fat was just as potent as meat in raising pressure.

Carbohydrate and fat make for overweight, and overweight is generally acknowledged to be associated with high blood pressure. Whether it is cause and effect is something that seems to me not proved. It is a good thing to reduce overweight on general principles; there is frequently a reduction in blood pressure with reduction in weight, but not commensurate with the weight reduction.

Salt—This, again, is a debatable topic. Several years ago the salt-free diet in high blood pressure was used quite extensively. Great claims were made for it, but the fact that is has fallen out of fashion would seem to indicate that it did not come up to expectations. Willis, in an experiment on himself, using a low salt and vegetable diet, produced a marked reduction in blood pressure. But, of course, any diet which is low and hence weakening, does that. So many of these experiments demand excessively unbalanced diets that the results are not reliable. American observers have not been able to convince themselves that salt has any effect on blood pressure.

Water—Plethora hydremica, as the older doctors used to call excessive water intake, receives little attention today. Recent experiments by Holball show that there is no change in the blood volume in high blood pressure, and believes there is no relation between it and high water intake.

Roughage and its effect on constipation have not proved to be important factors in lowering or raising blood pressure.

In a list of 210 patients who were 10 or more pounds overweight, Klinefelter found that 107 had higher blood pressure than normal, 103 were about normal. Of those who were high, meat-eating was prominent in 83 instances, fat in 78; salt was used excessively by 69; water excessively by 76, and vegetables and fruits by 50. So it looks as if you couldn't eat anything if you want to avoid high blood pressure.

In dietary experiments, he found on a full diet, rich in meat, fat, salt and water, there was an average rise of 10 points in blood pressure —not very much. A spell of excitement would do twice that. Using a low diet, emphasizing fruit and vegetables, the patients changed from an average of 38 pounds overweight to 2 pounds underweight; reduced the pressure, on an average, 14 points.

Amelia Earhart Tests New Plane

Burbank, Calif., March 3 (AP).—Amelia Earhart took her flying laboratory up for a test today and found the monoplane she will use in her flight around the world, starting within two weeks, "in perfect shape."

Before the test hop she rigged a box kite for emergencies, explaining if she were forced down in mid-Pacific she would fly it as a distress signal.

In the absence of Capt. Harry Manning, who will accompany her at least as far as Darwin, Australia, as navigator, the woman flier took tentative squints through directional instruments. She is no mean navigator, herself, having flown the Atlantic and crossed the Pacific solo from Honolulu to Oakland.

House Guests' Rudeness Irks Two Hostesses

'Bedroom Clothes' at Table and Breakfast in Bed Prove Problems.

By Margaret Wallace.

"We are a household of men and women," writes one Washington hostess who has, as she describes it, "house guest troubles." "I like to have house guests, but object to the casual kind. By this I mean the kind who feel so much at home that they don't think it necessary to come to my breakfast table fully dressed. They come in pajamas and in house coats. My sons are young college men and they are not used to seeing the women of the family wearing boudoir garments outside of their bedrooms, as I have never allowed my two daughters to do so, and, of course, I always dress carefully for breakfast myself.

Dowdy Diners.

"My husband objects to women coming to the breakfast table in what he terms their 'bedroom clothes,' with bare feet in sandals or boudoir slippers. Just now I have an old schoolmate with her two daughters at my house. They arrive for breakfast in pajamas and in barefoot sandals and water-wave caps tied under their chins. I thought they would change their habit after the first morning when they noticed that we were a more formal family, but they have not. We have always encouraged the friends of our children and our own friends to come in for a cup of coffee or fruit on their way to school or work. I feel embarrassed to have my friends and my children's friends see our guests dressed so casually. Do you think I could ask them to dress for breakfast without offending them?"

This hostess has a very trying problem to solve, since her guests do not follow the example of the hostess and her daughters arriving at the breakfast table fully dressed. She could suggest that they dress before breakfast very tactfully by saying that in that way they would be ready for the plans she has made for them after breakfast.

Late Risers.

"Our family always appears at the breakfast table," she writes, "and we are not in the habit of having breakfast in our room. We only have one servant and the extra duty of serving breakfast in the room expected by some of our guests makes the household and servant problem a more difficult one. But of course I wish to make guests comfortable and when friends who are used to eating their breakfast in bed visit us we always send in a tray. But we have had a guest for two weeks who not only expects her breakfast in bed but refuses to allow us to send in a tray until she is ready for it. Sometimes she wakes at 9 o'clock, but will not have her tray until 11 or even 12, although she will spend some of the time telephoning, reading or writing notes. It makes a difference in our household, for I find it impossible to keep my one servant on any routine of work. I tried taking the duty of serving this guest myself, but she scolded me for spoiling my servant, and said that she would go without any breakfast at all if I insisted on arranging and carrying in the tray myself. My husband is indignant and insists that I should tell my guests that I have to keep regular meal hours in my house. He thinks my guest is very rude."

This woman's husband is correct. This guest is not only rude but inconsiderate. A well-bred guest would make every effort to conform to the routine of the household and would not insist on having breakfast in her room if it were not a household custom. Above all, she would not ask her hostess to deviate from her routine meal hours for her.

Only if such a gesture is made by one or the other and regarded by both as irrevocably binding could you hope to find happiness together. And it is my belief that you are both too young to realize the far-reaching implications of such a renunciation now; and too uninformed to know whether you would evaluate it as wise when you had reached maturer years. If the boy yields to your side he might discover years later that he had gone against his conscience for his emotion's sake, and he might break with you and his promise, to go back along the road in pursuit of salvation. And if you yield to the boy, with your parents unalterably opposed to such a course, what chance have you for a balanced happiness? Very little, I should say. For you have disclosed your great degree of dependence upon their approval by testifying that their opposition to the boy has made you miserably uphappy. If you were able to stand on your own feet, and act without their encouragement, you would have made up your own mind as to what was best to do and would be acting on that decision by now.

• • • •

I doubt that the average man or woman can be adequately happy in a marriage which exacts repudiation of family ties and family tradition. Strong, independent, positive personalities who possess the ability to weigh intangible values and the audacity to choose between two alternatives sometimes do repudiate family and tradition in order to marry the person of their choice, but they know they are electing a half portion in so doing and they sternly purpose to be content with that.

• • • •

This problem is not so simple as you believe. It is not a case of pleasing your parents on the one hand or yourself on the other. Even if your parents fully approved of your marrying the young man on any terms, grave individual differences bound to arise out of your different religious backgrounds would still wait to be reckoned with. The reconciliation of these differences could only be approached by one or the other of you adopting an alien spiritual way. And no one can say with any authority whether this approach would bring success and happiness in marriage. Time alone could tell.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Young Girl's Parents Oppose Her Marrying Youth of a Different Faith; She Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 19 years old and in love with a boy of another religious faith. My parents are so opposed to my going with him, because of the religious angle, that it has really made my life unbearable. This young man wants me to marry him when I finish business college, and I know I could be perfectly happy with him if it weren't for the religious difference. Even this would not be so bad if my parents did not look on it as they do. They cannot bear to think of me marrying a person who belongs to his particular faith, even though this boy is a fine person. What would you advise me to do? Give him up to please my parents? Or should I think of my own happiness? UNHAPPY.

• • • •

DEAR UNHAPPY: For the majority of more or less religiously inclined persons there is no greater obstacle to harmony and happiness in marriage than a difference in religious belief. This is particularly true where there are children of the union, for each parent sincerely feels that, with all due respect to the fine qualities of the other parent, spiritual justice will not have been rendered the children unless and until they have been trained in his particular creed. The conviction goes too deep for rational discussion and intellectual tolerance. It is an issue which cannot be resolved to the satisfaction of both parents. I know this from observation and from marital problems arising from just such a source which have been referred to this column for discussion.

• • • •

I wonder just how fully you have discussed the ramifications of possible marriage with this boy? Has he agreed to give up his faith for you? Or has he told you that in order to be married by the rites of his church you must embrace his faith at least to the extent of giving a sacred promise to rear any children of the union in that faith? Is he prepared to do the one, or you to promise the other?

Mildred Shive Wed to Hugh J. McKane In Rectory of Catholic Church Here

Only Few Relatives and Friends Witness Ceremonies.

Couple Depart for North After Reception for 100 Guests.

Miss Mildred Shive, daughter of Mrs. Hannah Wyllie Shive, of Huntington, W. Va., yesterday became the bride of Mr. Hugh J. McKane, of Milwaukee, Wis., son of Mrs. James P. McKane, and the late Mr. McKane, of Washington. The bride arrived in the Capital Sunday, accompanied by her mother and her aunt, Mrs. H. R. Wyllie, also of Huntington, and Mr. McKane came from Milwaukee for the ceremony.

The wedding took place at 11 o'clock in the rectory of St. Thomas' Catholic Church, with the Rev. Robert Keesler officiating. The bride was attended by Miss Eleanor Coburn, of Norfolk, Va., a classmate when both attended National Cathedral School here, and Mr. Jack Stafford, of Washington, served as best man.

She wore a costume suit of coronation blue, trimmed in gray fox, and with gray accessories, and a corsage of large purple and yellow pansies. Miss Coburn wore a suit of new thistle shade, trimmed in beige fox, with navy blue accessories.

Only Few Present.

Only relatives and a few close friends were present at the wedding and the breakfast which followed at the home of the bridegroom's mother, 2939 Newton street. Mrs. Shive wore a black and white print gown with a white hat; Mrs. Wyllie a print gown in shades of purple with grey accessories; Mrs. McKane, black crepe with a gray cape, and the bridegroom's sister, Miss Katherine McKane, who made her debut here a season ago, wore a smart all-black outfit with a black caracul cape.

Others present were the bridegroom's aunt, Mrs. Fred Raber, and Mr. Chris Lins, both of Milwaukee; Mr. and Mrs. William Shearer and Mr. John Richter, of Washington, and Miss Vivian Jouan, of Huntington.

A large bridal cake formed the centerpiece for the bride's table at the wedding breakfast.

Depart on Trip.

In the evening a reception was held, at which Mrs. McKane entertained about 100 guests in honor of her son and his bride before they left on their wedding trip. The bride received in a gown of turquoise blue chiffon trimmed in American beauty and wore camelias of American beauty shade. Mrs. McKane was in pink crepe trimmed in lavender flowers and fur; Mrs. Shive wore a gown of black crepe with a wide beaded girdle worked in colors; Mrs. Wyllie a fuchsia frock, and Miss McKane a black off-the-shoulder gown, with white ruching around the neckline.

After the reception, the bridal couple left for the North in their car, which was a wedding gift from the bridegroom's mother, the bride wearing the costume in which she was married. They will motor to Milwaukee, and will reside in Mukwanago, on Lake Beulah, in the old McKane family home, which is also a wedding gift to them and which is furnished and ready for their arrival.

Mr. McKane is a graduate of Marquette University, in Wisconsin, and now is engaged in business in Milwaukee.

Many Capital Residents Plan To Attend Coronation May 12

Hessler Studio.

MISS MARGOT GARRETT.

About 20 Members of Diplomatic and Social Sets Here Will Journey to England This Summer; Bookings on Steamships Already Taken by Some.

By Dudley Harmon.

The coronation, May 12, is arousing almost as much interest in Washington as in London. The world's biggest social event is causing a flurry among a score of Capital residents who have tickets for it.

Those coronation-bound have been thumbing travel booklets. One steamship company offers to let its passengers live on liners which will be anchored on the Thames, conveniently near London.

Neither Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, nor Lady Lindsay expect to attend the coronation but several members of the British diplomatic colony in Washington will be there. Sir Ronald was present at the crowning of the late King George V.

Mrs. A. L. P. Mark-Wardlaw, wife of the Assistant Naval Attache of the British Embassy, will sail in April with her son, Mark, for England and it is possible that Capt. Mark-Wardlaw may decide to go too. Their daughter, Eve, who is at school in Switzerland, will go to London to be with her family for the ceremonies.

Mrs. Bewley May Attend.

Mrs. Kenneth Bewley, wife of the former Financial Counselor of the British Embassy, has hopes of attending also now that her husband has been transferred to the Foreign Office in London. She is at present staying with the Counselor of the Canadian Legation and Mrs. Hume Wrong preparatory to sailing to join Mr. Bewley.

There's a possibility that the Chief of Protocol, Mr. Richard Southgate, will journey to England to be present for the festivities but Mrs. Southgate will remain at home. Mrs. John Ward, wife of the Assistant Chief of Protocol, already has bookings on a liner leaving from New York early in the future. An Englishwoman by birth, Mrs. Lord will visit friends and relatives in London.

Miss Margot Garrett, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Angus Garrett, left last evening for the first stage of her journey to London. She will remain in New York until March 10, when she will sail aboard the Queen Mary for England, to be hte guest of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Alastair McLean, of Scotland, in their London home. She will remain until June, and possibly longer, if her stepbrother, Mr. Harry Darlington, joins her there, as he now expects.

Mrs. Worthington Plans Trip.

Mrs. Ralph Worthington and her daughter, Miss Ethel Worthington, another of the season's debutantes, with Mrs. Edward Guest Gibson and her daughter, Miss Cecil Gibson, of Baltimore, are planning to sail for England April 28 to be in London and will later tour the British Isles and the Continent.

The Misses Anne and Aletha Harcourt, English visitors to Washington, who like our Capital so well that they have come here five times in the past two years, have resolved not to miss the celebration in London.

Although their plans are still tentative, it is probable they will sail from New York March 10 on the Berengaria. Mr. Charles Hewes, of Washington, who spends every summer in London is expected to arrive there a bit earlier this year to see the festivities. He is at present on a Mediterranean cruise.

Mr. Perry to Attend.

The younger set of Washington is interested in the appointment of Mr. De Wolf Perry as one of the representatives of the American clergy at the festivities. The son of Bishop Perry, of Rhode Island, he spent a winter here a year ago as a student at the Alexandria Theological Seminary.

If young James Roosevelt should be appointed a delegate, as rumored yesterday, Washington will have an even more brilliant representation at the Coronation. However, Mr. Roosevelt said the report was "news to him" and Mrs. James Roosevelt could not be reached yesterday for comment.

Congressional Club Plans Weekly Tea

Those pouring will be Mrs. Samuel W. Beakes, Mrs. Fred Bierman, Mrs. Richard J. Welch and Mrs. Dudley A. White.

Mrs. Robert Earle and Miss Reba Doughton will assist, and the hospitality committee includes Mrs. Frank Kloeb, Mrs. Albert E. Carter, Mrs. Milton A. Romjue and Mrs. Dow W. Harter.

Miss Robina Townes and Miss Evelyn Prothero, of Woodbury, Conn., are staying at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Miss Flora Higgins, of Thompsonville, Conn., has arrived at the Shoreham. She will spend several weeks in the Capital before going to New York.

New Custom Substitutes for Former Habit of Individual Tribute; Miss Cecil, Soprano, Presents Concert and Navy Band Entertains.

This dinner which took place at the Mayflower is one of the rare occasions where the President dines outside the White House. Before his Administration, each member of the Cabinet entertained the President at a separate dinner. Mr. Roosevelt whose "New Deal" has even touched Washington's social life, inaugurated the new and more simple custom at the beginning of his term of office.

A gold Louis XVI centerpiece filled with purple iris, white lilacs, Joanna Hill roses and sprays of acacia decorated the long table in the Chinese room of the Mayflower. On each side of the centerpiece was an epergne filled with fruit. There was a suggestion of spring in four bowls on the table arranged with the same combination of flowers, and pansies.

Baskets Made of Candy.

A dark red carnation was placed at each of the gentlemen's place at the table to be worn as a boutonniere, and a white gardenia for the ladies. Two large baskets made of candy and tied with red, white and blue ribbons made of spun sugar were supplemented by two miniature candy chariots drawn by red, gold and purple butterflies.

A section of the Navy Band played during the dinner. Afterwards the guests went to the grand ballroom to hear a concert by Miss Winifred Cecil, brilliant young American soprano, a native New Yorker, who made her debut at the Town Hall there on March 16, 1933, and appeared in Washington with the National Symphony Orchestra last month.

The Vice President, Mr. John N. Garner, was not present at last evening's dinner as Mrs. Garner is ill, but the distinguished company included every Cabinet member and the wife of each official with the exception of Mrs. James A. Farley, wife of the Postmaster General, who is in Florida.

Notable Guests Are Present.

Among the guests were the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Hull in a black net gown with a full skirt and a square neck; the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer C. Cummings, and the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Claude A. Swanson. Mrs. Swanson, who recently returned from Atlantic City and is off again this week to visit friends in Virginia, wore a white taffeta gown and a corsage of gardenias.

Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, wife of the Secretary of War, was attending her first party since the birth last month of their youngest son, Cooper Coolidge Woodring. Her frock of white net had a full skirt and a wide blue velvet sash.

The Postmaster General, Mrs. James A. Farley; the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Harold L. Ickes; the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper and the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins, completed the list of Cabinet members giving the dinner.

Other guests were the Speaker of the House and Mrs. William Bankhead, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, Mrs. William Woodin, widow of the former Secretary of the Treasury, who came from her home in New York for the occasion; Mrs. George H. Dern, widow of the late Secretary of War; Mr. and Mrs. James Roosevelt, Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission; Col. and Mrs. Marvin McIntyre. Mrs. McIntyre wore a lace frock in a Dubonnet shade; Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Walker, Mrs. Louis McHenry Howe, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Early, the latter in white crepe; Miss Marguerite LeHand, Mrs. James M. Helm and Mrs. Malvina Thompson Scheider.

Because of the Victory Dinner being given tonight, last night's function was given on the third instead of the fourth of March as heretofore since the beginning of President Roosevelt's term in office. Prior to that time separate dinners were given for the President by members of the Cabinet.

Wyoming Plans Annual Banquet

State Society Is Arranging Costume Dinner-Dance for March 20.

Senator and Mrs. Harry H. Schwartz, Senator and Mrs. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, and Representative and Mrs. Paul R. Greever will be guests of honor at the first dinner dance of the Wyoming State Society, which will be given the evening of March 20 at the Hotel Raleigh.

Commissioner Fred W. Johnson, of the General Land Office, is president of the society, and Mrs. Nellie Taylor Ross, director of the mint, and former Governor of Wyoming, vice president. The occasion will be the annual meeting of the organization.

A feature of the dinner menu will be elk meat, sent for the party from Wyoming by hunters who brought down the elk during the open season in the fall and stored the meat. Decorations will be sage brush, and candles with sage brush seed in the wax will be burned to impart the fragrance of the Western country.

The guests have been invited to come in costume, and many already have written home for "chaps" and sombreros. Col. Jonathan M. Wainright, commandant of Fort Myer, is co-operating with the entertainment committee, lending cowboy outfits worn by some of the Fort Myer troopers in the Friday rides, for members of the orchestra.

THE MERRY WHIRL

By Marylyn.

"Three little girls from school"—got together yesterday afternoon to chat of college days over their tea cups. They were Gudrun Hurja, who entertained, Mrs. Don Abel, of Tacoma, Wash., and Mrs. Homer T. Bone, wife of the Senator from Washington.

The Hurja house in Georgetown is a delightful place, entered through a bricked garden court. The drawing room of turquoise blue has a rich deep rug of wine color, matching some of the heavier pieces of furniture. There are numerous interesting Oriental pieces here and there, including the fascinating low, round beautifully inlaid chow bench. On the wall beside the stairway hang a number of rare old prints.

While the guests sat and quietly talked as they enjoyed their cocktails or tea, Bobbie, the neat little bulldog, and Gretel, the coy dachshund, romped around, bestowing attention on all the guests until finally their pretty owner banished them to the terrace. But not for long, as their soft whines and scratchings at the French window soon restored them to good favor and they were back again, scurrying over the room.

Among those who dropped in were Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie in a wool crepe of grape color with black accessories; Mrs. L. C. Zapf, in bright green trimmed with leopard; Mrs. Robert Taylor, who reminisced on her first days in Washington when her husband entered the Senate during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt; Mrs. Frederic William Wile and Mrs. Helen Halloran.

Things have come to a pretty pass when the solons begin to have difficulties getting into their offices. Not so long ago Senator Byrd walked into his particular corner, headed across the outer office and was about to enter his own private domain. His peaceful way was interrupted by a gruff voice—"Here, wait a minute—no politician is going to get in to see the Senator ahead of me!"

Over in one corner of the office sat a farmer, who stuck to his rights.

Then there was the time that Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina, arrived only to find a long line waiting outside his office door. He was the first of the "force" to arrive and so made his way to the portals, taking out his keys as he went. He had almost put the key in the lock when several voices chimed in, "You can't do that—you have to get in line and wait your turn."

Just imagine the surprise and red faces in both of these cases when the visitors discovered to whom they were speaking.

• • • •

Two very busy girls these days are Martha Talley and Virginia Palmer, who are spending practically every available moment sewing on things to fill the Junior League's charity chests. Saw them yesterday morning having a bite to eat. Virginia was in brown trimmed with mink and wearing a cute off-the-face hat of straw caught with a beige ornament at the front. Her companion was wearing a checked topcoat over a trim cocoa brown skirt and tailored blouse of green, brown and white striped satin.

• • • •

The Acting Postmaster General and Mrs. W. W. Howes were dining and dancing in the Pall Mall Room of the Raleigh Hotel when we stopped by. She had on a tailored navy-blue suit with a blouse of a lighter shade of blue. On her dark hair, which she wears softly waved and tucked into a flat chignon, was a small, saucy straw hat.

Doubtless shopping for clothes to take with her when her husband leaves for his new post in Athens, Mme. van Breugel Douglas was looking at a beach ensemble of browns, oranges and ivory-printed linen when we saw her.

No Sentiment.

Some handshakes for Fred D. Fagg, jr., Vidal's successor, but no flowers . . . And what's a promotion, we ask, without a basket of flowers on the desk? . . . "What's a promotion without flowers on the desk?" asked, in return, someone at the Bureau of Air Commerce . . . And, answering himself, he says: "A promotion without flowers on the desk is a promotion at the Bureau of Air Commerce" . . . To which he appended a laugh and said: "A bunch of screwy aviators . . . they've got no sentiment . . . all a pretty new crowd here, anyhow . . . no, no flowers, no sentiment . . . we haven't a single flower today . . . none on Fagg's desk . . . sworn in with pretty ceremony, big chiefs around and all like that . . . everybody likes him, but no flowers . . . no sentiment."

Persons waiting on National President E. Claude Babcock of U. C. S. E. will have more elbow room . . . The former one-room office of the U. C. S. E. has expanded to four rooms, the personnel has been enlarged . . . Babcock explains: "We simply needed more room" . . . which was to be expected after a reading of Babcock's recently issued horizon-blue booklet. "Limitations on Civil Service Usefulness" . . . The mass of material he then worked from must have cluttered up more than one office . . . The office entrance now is room 843, National Press Building.

L. G. Hornby, currently in charge of the Division of Silvics, Northern Rocky Mountain Forest Experiment Station, Missoula, Mont., has been appointed head of the special fire control planning project launched by the Forest Service . . . Purpose: To bring the newest scientific developments of forest-fire control into effect, and to co-ordinate the results of 30 years of experience . . . Hornby's headquarters will be at Missoula, but his attention will be focused on all National Forest regions . . . Principal duties: Examination of fire-control methods used or planned for use; suggestion of new methods . . . Assignment's duration: Probably three years . . . About Hornby: A graduate of the School of Forestry, University of Michigan; entered Forest Service, 1916, as a forest assistant on the Flathead National Forest, Montana, where the fire hazard was particularly high; since then, he has held increasingly responsible positions in the Forest Service.

Setting the Record Straight.

For the sake of the record, A. F. G. E. President Stengle comments: 'Very recently, hearings were held before the House Civil Service Committee on the Ramspeck bill for the extension of the merit system. At that time * * * I appeared in support of that bill, but made suggested amendments in my remarks. Thereafter, by some I was quoted as being opposed to the competitive system of examinations. By others I was quoted as being opposed to the noncompetitive system of examinations.

"The truth is that I most ardently supported the merit system, which, stripped of its verbiage, means that there shall be honest competition and a test of merit and fitness. Were is possible for the Government to spend $5,000,000 and permit the Civil Service Commission to hold open competitive examinations within a reasonable time I would favor that proposal in preference to all others, provided those who have been serving the Government faithfully and efficiently were to receive some credit for service rendered in the rating of papers.

* * * We have been told that it would take at least five years in which to hold competitive examinations for all positions now in the temporary offices. To await that length of time before eligible lists could be obtained we would disrupt many of these agencies and destroy their usefulness. * * * under the circumstances, I favor a noncompetitive test for all those agencies which the President is to be authorized to bring in under civil service classification.

"But I do not favor the proposal of the President's reorganization plan which states that only those who are certified as to merit by their immediate superior officers will be permitted to take this test. If present employes do not measure up to the standard they should have been dismissed long ago * * *"

Women Qualified As Job-Holders, O'Mahoney Says

The problem confronting the Nation today is not whether women should be sent back to their homes in order to create more jobs, but in finding jobs for every one, regardless of sex, Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, asserted last night at a dinner meeting of the American Association of University Women.

"The reason there are suggestions that women hold no jobs in the economic world is because of the fear of unemployment," said O'Mahoney.

Women should have equal opportunities professionally with men, he added.

The dinner was given by a special committee of the association dealing with the question of the place of women in the economic world of today. Besides Senator O'Mahoney, speakers included Miss Anna Youngman, of the editorial staff of The Washington Post; Representative Emanuel Celler, of New York, and Dorothy Kenyon, New York lawyer.

Audit Relief Control for D. C. Urged

House Group Asked to Change Control of Accounting.

$41,000,000 Expended Here in Last Four Years.

Appalled at a calculation that $41,000,000 had been spent on unemployment relief in Washington by the District and Federal governments within the last four years, the House sub-committee on District appropriations yesterday considered a proposal to place all local relief accounting under the auditor's office.

Thomas E. Lodge, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, urged the sub-committee to give the auditor's office direct control of the accounting of disbursements by case workers, now under direction of the Public Assistance Division.

Chairman Collins intimated after the hearing that he is favorable to the proposal.

Civic Heads Heard.

More than a dozen spokesmen for civic organizations were heard by the sub-committee yesterday afternoon in rapid succession. The open forum will continue today and probably run into tomorrow.

The suggestion of Chairman Collins, made before the budget hearings began, that a one-way toll might be installed at Chain Bridge to make Virginians pay a share of the cost of a new span, hit a snag at yesterday's session.

Dr. Llewellyn Jordan, of the Board of Trade, submitted a brief to support his statement that Congress by an act of March 3, 1833, had decreed that Chain Bridge should be "forever free."

Cites Indorsement.

Collins appeared unperturbed by the disclosure, however, and remarked that some of the local citizen spokesmen had indorsed the proposal.

The first witnesses heard by the subcommittee were from the Federation of Citizens Associations. The group, besides asking for larger appropriations for health, police and fire departments, urged a "fair Federal payment."

The delegation, headed by Lodge, was questioned, it is understood, in an off-the-record proceeding regarding the federation's views on local taxation.

While members expressed their individual opinions as to what new forms of taxation might be expected to increase District revenue, the delegation took the position that no definite recommendations can be made until the Federal payment and the expected deficit are made known.

Members Listed.

Included in the delegation were Dr. C. B. Campbell, chairman of the health committee; Miss Elaine Eppley, vice president of the federation; H. C. Phillips, chairman of the education committee; L. A. Carruthers, chairman of the fiscal relations committee, and Harry S. Wender, chairman of the public safety committee.

Mrs. Ernest W. Howard, chairman of the police and fire committee of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, asked for 150 additional policemen and restoration of $20,000 for fire fighting equipment deleted by the Budget Bureau.

Lodge urged that policemen now assigned to clerical duty be placed on patrol and be replaced by civilian employes.

Miss Selma Borchardt, of the Washington Teachers' Union, made a general plea for more teachers, public school buildings, funds for boys' clubs, and restoration of the in-service promotion system denied for the last three years.

Night School Fund Asked.

Dorsey W. Hyde, representing several west-end civic groups, asked for $10,000 to finance a night school at Western High School. He said that 600 students would attend it at once and pointed out that they now have to travel to other sections of the city.

An increase of 214 in the personnel of the Metropolitan Police Department was asked by Morris A. Bealle, of the West School Parent-Teacher Association. He pointed out that this increase is justified by the growth in the city's population during the last five years.

J. M. Shaffer, president of the Southwest Citizens Association, appealed for funds for the long-delayed new Jefferson Junior High School but stated that his organization does not insist upon purchase of the site that the District has been trying to buy at a reasonable price for the last six years.

Clayton Maps Fight for $1 Pass And 7½c Trolley Token Price

Plans for a new battle to force restoration of the $1 street car pass were revealed yesterday by William McK. Clayton, chairman of the Public Utilities Committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

With the Public Utilities Commission expected to hold valuation and rate hearings in the next several weeks, Clayton said he plans to have organized citizenry prepared to fight for fare reductions.

The Capital Transit Co., according to Clayton, is prepared to battle at the rate hearings for permission to increase the price of street car tokens which now are sold four for 30 cents, or at the rate of 7½ cents each. The company has applied to the P. U. C. for permission to increase the token rate to three for 25 cents, or 8 1-3 cents apiece.

"The transit company has not been fair with the car-riding public," Clayton said. "Before the sale of $1 passes was stopped in January the company should have given the public an opportunity to voice a protest.

"There is no reason for increasing the token rate. It is as high now as it ought to be. We can show that the company can retain its present rate, restore the $1 pass and carry more passengers and make more money than it does now."

Glacier Priest To Seek Islets In Polar Area

Father Hubbard Tells of Expedition Planned for 1939.

Plans for a three-month dash across 300 miles of Arctic waste north of Point Barrow in search of undiscovered tiny islands about 150 miles from the North Pole, were publicly announced for the first time night by Father Bernard R. Hubbard, famous Jesuit explorer and scientist.

"The Glacier Priest," who terms himself a "popularizer of Alaska," described the Arctic trip, planned for 1939, in a preface to an illustrated lecture on Alaska, delivered last night before 1,500 people in Constitution Hall.

Father Hubbard plans to spend a year or more first in preparation for the trip, living with an Eskimo tribe on King Island, midway between Alaska and Siberia in Bering Sea. Then, accompanied by three other Americans and about 20 Eskimos, he will make the trip across frozen wastes and back, searching for tiny, rocky islands.

Start in April, 1939.

The trip will start in April, probably two years hence, and the party of 24 will carry latest radio equipment to keep in constant touch with civilization. Dog sleds will not be used, the explorers traveling on foot and carrying kyacks for use in open water.

With him Father Hubbard will take Bernard Stanley, radio operator, and the two men who have accompanied him on Alaskan expeditions for the last ten years, George Chisholm and Edgar Levin.

"The Glacier Priest" has planned the trip for some time to search for islands he believes exist in the frozen waste surrounding the Pole. He expects to find no valuable land, but is planning the hazardous trip purely for adventure and scientific data.

He feels confident the islands exist, he says, because huge flocks of birds each summer fly north from Alaska, returning in the fall exhausted from the long trip and scarcity of food. His belief is strengthened, he says, by reports of a body discovered two years ago, clothed in the costume of two centuries ago, washed up on Alaskan shores.

Frozen Two Centuries.

Although he did not inspect the body personally, the report being given him by Dr. Victor Leigne, of Creighton University, the priest says he believes the body had been frozen in ice, possibly for two centuries, and may indicate the islands he will seek were once inhabited by Eskimos.

He says clothing found on the body had not been worn by Eskimos since the late 1700's, and strongly believes it is that of a native who once lived on the islands near the Pole. The native, Father Hubbard suggests, was one of a party driven northward by storms, eventually seeking refuge on the islands.

The rest of the priest's lecture was devoted to descriptions of Alaska and his several expeditions on glaciers. He praised the country highly and commended the Matanuska Valley, recently colonized by farmers from the North Central States.

He summarized the huge territory by saying, "it is so rich in resources, that if it were in Europe, there would have already been a dozen wars about it."

Wild Arguses From Borneo Are Guests of Dr. C. F. Denley

Noted Rockville Ornithologist Also Fraternizes With Kaleeges, Satyr Trapogans and Mikados—All Pheasants to You—on His Pleasant Farm.

By Bill McCormick.

The kindly looking little gentleman with all the fine feathered friends out Rockville way is Mr. Charles F. Denley.

Mr. Denley not only is an ornithologist of note, but an equally famous aviculturist. All of which means that he not only knows his birds, but raises them as well.

Pheasants are the Denley specialty. His pheasant factory at Glenmont, Md., is alive with such specimens as true lineated Kaleeges, Satyr Trapogans, silver pheasants, blue-eared pheasants, Bornean Arguses, Mikados, Reeves pheasants and other rare types.

In the history of each particular type lies romance, glamour.

Take the Bornean Argus, perhaps the most interesting bird in his collection. It is so timid, so elusive and lives so deep in the wilds of Borneo that no hunter, white or native, ever has shot one. In its native habitat, Bornean Argus builds what fanciers call a "dance arena," a clear space about 18 or 20 feet deep in the jungle.

To build his arena, the male bird is forced to cut down large trees. Some it pecks down. Larger ones it fells by pecking away the bark at the base until the sap runs. Large ants and insects then attack the tree where the bark has been removed, eating clear through.

Once the arena is completed, the male Argus uses it for a bit of strutting and dancing, then emits its mating call. The female birds, who have fled during the construction period, fly back hurriedly, are mated, then return to the jungle to lay their eggs.

Denley has five young Bornean Argus pheasants on his Glenmont farm. They are the only ones ever bred in the United States. They are so tame they will eat out of your hand.

Thirteen years ago the Mikado was unknown to white men. A group of travelers ran down the new species.

Marco Polo described the bird which later became known as the Reeves Pheasant. Nobody believed Marco's story of the fantastic creature he had seen during his thirteenth century ramblings. In the ninteenth century British Council-General Reeves discovered the bird in the mountains of central China.

Blue-eared Pheasants come from Tibet and western China. One specimen on the Denley place was carried 45 days on the back of a coolie, spent 40 days in pens during layovers in the jungle and was one year reaching San Francisco from its native habitat.

The silver pheasant which comes from the territory of central Yunnan east to Fokien, is called the Flower Bird of China. Occidentals saw such birds reproduced on the gowns of the mandarins, but dismissed the birds depicted as figments of the imagination. It was years before the Silvers actually were run down to lend authenticity to the gowns of the mandarins.

Satyr Trapogans come from the higher wooded slopes of the central and eastern Himalayas. They are quite troublesome in hot weather, but Denley solves that problem very neatly by putting dry ice under their pens when it's hot.

The Denley collection can be described only by the bromidic term "riot of color." Some of the birds have only a few different colors. Others have all the colors of the rainbow, and the hues have an iridescence the rainbow never knew.

Some of the birds drum instead of giving a mating call. Drumming means they beat their wings wildly, like Tarzan beating his chest—and for the same reason.

Pheasants are not so difficult to raise. Fighting and accidents cause 40 per cent of the deaths at the Denley Farm. The birds do, however, suffer from some diseases. They have pneumonia, tuberculosis, a disease called roup, different kinds of mites and even corns.

Sex of the majority of young pheasants can be determined when they are less than 6 months old by differences in color or markings or by the presence of spurs on the males. However, both sexes of the eared pheasants have exactly the same markings and the males frequently fail to develop spurs.

Obviously, the experts cannot wait until such a bird lays an egg—or doesn't—to tell whether it is a lady bird or gentleman bird, so they decide by facial markings.

In the course of becoming an expert on the subject of pheasants, Mr. Denley has collected what is believed by many the most complete library in the world on the subject. He has many books dealing with the matter. Some of them, limited editions, are worth thousands of dollars.

Denley started in the business naturally. He collected eggs while a boy in Canada. Later he became a taxidermist, collected one kind of a bird, then another and turned to pheasants about 35 years ago.

"A bird fancier has to be born, he can't be made," he believes.

He certainly has a fine collection of fine feathered pheasant friends.

Jury Breaks Scientist's Will, Gives $20,000 to Distant Kin

The will of Dr. Ernest George Fischer, Government scientist, was "broken" in District Court yesterday when a jury found that the octogenarian inventor of a tide-predicting machine was of unsound mind when he left a $20,000 estate to an old friend, Henry J. Watkins, jr.

Under the jury's finding, the estate will go to George C. Bouis, a grand newphew-in-law, of Baltimore, Md.

Dr. Fischer, 83, at the time of his death, was a familiar figure at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium, where, despite his advanced years, he took part in games with men many years his junior. He was the chief of the instrument division of the Coast and Geodetic Survey when he retired in 1922, and he gave to the Government a machine he had perfected that predicts the ebb and flow of tides two years in advance.

Attorney Cedric F. Johnson, who strove to uphold the validity of the will, said Federal experts had estimated Dr. Fisher's "tide" machine saved millions of dollars a year.

Attorneys Jerome Barnard and Earnest Henry said Dr. Fischer was ill in Garfield Hospital when he made his will and was not legally sane. With that contention, the jury in Justice J. W. Cox's court agreed.

Cost of Living In Washington Climbs Slightly

Government Workers Pay 6-10 Per Cent More Than Year Ago.

Commissioner of Labor Statistics Isador Lubin yesterday submitted a report to Secretary of Labor Perkins showing that the cost of living of Government employes in Washington increased six-tenths of 1 per cent in the 11 months ended December 15.

Hardest blow of all was taken by families of employes whose salaries were less than $2,500, figures of the bureau revealed. According to the official tables, these families stood a rise in the cost of goods purchased of nine-tenths of 1 per cent, somewhat higher than the average increase for all classes.

The cost of all articles purchased by the families of employes in the custodial group showed a decrease of one-tenth of 1 per cent, while the families of employes with salaries of $2,500 or more paid six-tenths of 1 per cent more for articles purchased in December than they did in January, 1936.

Employes living as single individuals found the cost of living only four-tenths per cent higher.

Washington Youths Take West Point Examination

Maxwell (first alternate), Pound, Va.; Robert C. Hillman (second alternate), Appalachia, Va.; John H. Glass, Norfolk, Va.; John W. Guckeyson (first alternate), Chevy Chase, Md.

Parents Flooding Board With Attacks On Red Rider Oath

Way Believed Paved for Reinstatement of Mrs. Janssen.

The Civil Service Commission's recent charges that the Board of Education was "evading" the economy act marriage clause appeared dropped yesterday, when Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, informed the school trustees the way was paved to reinstate Mrs. Ruth M. Janssen to her former teaching job.

Mrs. Janssen, who resigned from the school system to save her husband's Bureau of Census position, became the center of controversy last fall when Dr. Ballou disclosed that under new Civil Service rulings she was eligible for reappointment.

Dr. Ballou insisted that since the Civil Service Commission had ruled that Section 213 (the married clause) of the economy act did not apply to District of Columbia employes; that all teachers who had resigned to keep their Federally employed husbands from being fired were eligible for reinstatement. The Civil Service Commission retorted such a course was an "evasion" of the law.

Offer No Obstacle.

Yesterday Dr. Ballou told board members at their meeting that Civil Service officials agreed to offer no obstacle to Mrs. Janssen's reappointment to the school system.

He also reported he had communicated with the Bureau of Census and was assured that Mrs. Janssen's re-employment would not jeopardize the position held there by her husband, Theodore A. Janssen.

"Mrs. Janssen has not formally applied for reinstatement," said Dr. Ballou, "but I understand she is ready to do so, and if there is no objection from the board I shall notify her she is eligible."

There were no objections raised.

Two Conditions.

According to board regulations teachers who, like Mrs. Janssen, resigned because of section 213—which forbids the employment in the Government of both husband and wife—were eligible for reinstatement on two conditions. First they must qualify under present board requirements, and second, officials in the Government department in which the husband, or wife, works must give the board assurance that the teacher's re-employment will not jeopardize the Government worker's job.

Immediately after passage of the economy act in 1933 the Board of Education held that no teachers with husbands, or wives, in Government employ could stay in their positions. Later, however, when the Civil Service Commission freed District workers from restrictions of the ruling, the school board removed the ban.

Eleven Organizations in District Demand Bill's Repeal.

Five Patriotic Contests For Washington Are Approved.

The Board of Education was assured yesterday that the "red rider" is no dead issue so far as the parents of school children are concerned.

In its offices were piled the communications and resolutions from 11 organizations in every section of the Capital—all urging continuance of the fight for repeal of the statute that forbids the teaching and advocacy of communism in Washington public schools. The letters were brought before the board members at their meeting, and their receipt acknowledged.

All the communications, except one, were from Parent-Teacher Associations. The exception came from the Elementary Principals Association.

Confidence In Board.

A resolution from the District of Columbia Association of Parents and Teachers voiced "full confidence in the judgment of the Board of Education in this matter."

The elementary principals expressed appreciation of the board's efforts "to mitigate the hardships" of the red rider and requested the school trustees to "stand firm for no compromise."

The Parent-Teacher Associations represented in the board's "red rider" correspondence included those at these schools: Whittier, Henry D. Cooke, Blow-Webb, Blair-Hayes, Hilton-Peabody, John Quincy Adams, Edmonds-Maury, Brookland-Noyes and Barnard.

Contests Approved.

Five essay contests of a civic and patriotic character were given approval by the board. The Ladies Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars were given permission to sponsor an essay contest on "Permanent Peace for America." The D. C. Tuberculosis Association will sponsor another on "The Negro Tuberculosis Problem—Past, Present and Future."

Another on "How Can International Disputes Be Settled in the Spirit of Fidac" will be staged by the American Legion. The American Bar Association will promote the writing of essays on the patriotic theme, "How and to What Extent Are the Rights and Liberties of the Individual Protected Under the Constitution of the United States." The Lucy Holcombe Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, will have the opportunity to present a medal to the Woodrow Wilson High School student who writes the best essay on a subject pertaining to American History.

Junior District Day.

Another Junior District Day, sponsored by the Washington Herald, will be staged with the approval and support of the board on April 10. On that day junior high school students will have the opportunity to occupy for a part of the day the chairs of the several District and school officials.

Character education reports, submitted the board by Miss Bertie Backus as the result of the experiment which she directed in the schools for two years prior to last June, were authorized by the board for distribution to school administrators for study.

Suspects Reverse Tradition; Shadow Detectives in Auto

Joseph Edward O'Brien, whom police term a small-time racketeer, and two associates were held in the Fifth Precinct station for eight hours yesterday "because they were following vice squad detectives."

O'Brien with Ray Moore, 26, 400 block G street northeast and Joseph Nesline, 23, 600 block Wharton place northeast, were arrested by Sergt. George Deyoe and Detectives William McEwen, Robert Egan and A. B. Smith nearly an hour after the police had stopped O'Brien's car and searched it for illicit liquor.

Not finding any contraband in the automobile, the police allowed the men to go free, but the suspects seemed dissatisfied with their release and began to follow the police car through the southeast section.

Enraged at the apparent mockery, Sergt. Deyoe stopped the men and again ordered them to drive to Fifth Precinct station where they were locked up for "investigation." They were released eight hours later.

At the same time the Justice Department announced the "Warring mob" was being sent to the Leavenworth penitentiary. The "boys" were convicted of assault with intent to kill and assault with a dangerous weapon. O'Brien, their target, was permanently crippled when a bullet shattered his knee cap. Those who were convicted were Charles R. Warring, Joseph S. Bond, who admitted being the "trigger man," Samuel S. Montgomery, Clarence Ware, John Sweeney and George F. Tear.

125 to Be Dropped By WPA in District

Under orders from WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins, 125 white-collar workers must be dropped from local WPA rolls by April 15, Commissioner George E. Allen announced yesterday.

The Hopkins order reduces the exemption permitting the employment of non-relief employes in supervisory and administrative capacities from 10 to 5 per cent.

The new program, Allen pointed out, is intended to insure that at least 95 per cent of all workers paid from project funds shall be persons certified as in need of relief by a public relief agency.

The new reductions will follow an administrative reorganization of the local WPA, which already has resulted in 250 dismissals from supervisory administrative jobs in the local relief organization.

Still Is Wrecked By Blast; Six Flee

An explosion of undetermined origin destroyed a 150-gallon still on the second floor of a house in the 2300 block of G street northwest yesterday, and rounted operators and occupants, who fled down the back stairs before police and firemen arrived.

Police found in the abandoned house 35 gallons of alsohol in 5-gallon cans and 22 50-gallon barrels of mash. Neighbors said six persons fled at the time of the blast.

Well I'll Tell You!

I oughta be ashamed of myself. I'm expected to show up at four different parties in town tonight and here I sit at home enjoyin' myself. I was jest thinkin' about the only joy I git out of goin' out someplace is gettin' back home. I use'ta think that the reason why a lot of city people jest have ta go out someplace every night was because they was restless, but I suppose that "goin' out" jest gits to be a habit. It's kinda like a disease.

I'll never forget the time I was havin' supper at my aunt's house and I noticed my uncle was restless all through supper. He left the table without even finishin' his meal with sorghum and biscuits. My aunt followed him into the bedroom and found him wipin' off his celluloid collar with a damp towel.

She looked at him and says, "Well, Monday you went to the ice cream social and Wednesday you went to a lecture at the Y. M. C. A. Where are you goin' tonight, Playboy?"

4,000 See Long Island Five Extended to Beat Colonials, 28 to 24; Revolta's 4-Under-Par 66 Leads Field in Hollywood Open Golf

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

ORLANDO, Fla., March 3. I wish to report one of baseball's little tragedies.

For three reasons, the dismal playlet from real life has been enacted daily whenever the Washington ball club takes the field. Against a backdrop of big league glamour and hero worship is projected the story of hollow toil, a lad apparently doomed to be baseball's only day laborer.

POVICH.

Harold Conn, wearing the regulation Washington uniform, has pitched from the mound of every ball park in the American League. To the thousands who have crammed the stadiums, Harold Conn, ostensibly is a big leaguer.

But the name of Harold Conn, never appears in the box score. When the game begins, Harold Conn's work is done. There remains for him only to seek out his nook in the Nat's dug-out and nurse in his aching heart the blasted hopes of the pitching game.

* * * *

Harold Conn is the Washington club's batting practice pitcher—the only plier of that trade in baseball. But his specialty is by command, not by choice. Deep down he retains the conviction that Harold Conn could be a great pitcher in his own right. But he dare not risk failure.

* * * *

Started in Biloxi

The wife and two kiddies back home in Gulfport, Miss., are an all-powerful deterrent whenever Harold Conn is of the half-resolve to chuck it all, quit his role with the Washington club, and strike out for himself on the pitching mound. That weekly pay check is a necessity to that trio back in Gulfport.

Harold Conn, now 28, is a strapping 6-footer of 185 pounds, who was a star among the semi-pro teams along the Gulf Coast. As a lad of 23, he walked the 12 miles from Gulfport to the Nats' camp at Biloxi five years ago, impressed Clark Griffith with his control. But the lack of a curve ball handicapped his prospects.

He was back in Biloxi in 1923 and Griffith remembered him as the big right-hander with the phenomenal control. But he would need a better curve ball.

* * * *

Biloxi, 1934: Conn again was present, hailed as the best pitcher along the Gulf Coast after losing only one game against the semi-pros during the 1933 season. Joe Cronin was manager of the Nats. The rookie Conn, with his strange ability to cut any corner of the plate, captured Cronin's interest. But there was that lack of a curve ball. When the Nats broke camp, Conn was left behind.

* * * *

'Come Quick, Conn!'

The Washington pitching staff was riddled by injuries that season. The over-worked regulars balked at pitching in batting practice and the raw rookies Cronin picked up for the work were unpardonably wild, hitting the batters with great frequency and wasting more pitches than they served across the plate.

Then it was that Cronin thought of the lad they had left behind at Biloxi with the remarkable control. A telegram brought Conn hastily to the Nats. He was installed as the batting practice pitcher and the Nats became the only club in the league with that type of specialist.

* * * *

Cronin was correct about Conn. Well did the big Mississippi boy serve the Nats. Hardly a pitch did he waste during the 20 minutes the visiting team is allowed batting practice on the road. Cronin congratulated himself. The hitters were getting a good swing at a pretty good fast ball, with no fear of being conked on the head by a wild pitch.

* * * *

Harris Retires Star

Bucky Harris, as manager of the Red Sox, noted Conn's pitching in practice, approved it. Harris as manager of the Nats the next season, rehired Conn. That was 1935. Last year, again, Conn was on the pay roll as a batting practice pitcher.

* * * *

Star pitchers, if asked to work on successive days, would yelp murder. Yet Conn toes the mound each day in the week, averaging 250 pitches in each practice, compared to the 150 pitches a hurler averages in a regulation game. Perhaps his back does ache from the steady and strenuous toil, but uncomplainingly Conn goes back to the mound the next afternoon.

* * * *

He has been given three salary raises since he was taken on by the Nats. Thus have his talents been recognized. But each salary increase has removed Conn farther from a pitching berth in his own right. When the Cincinnati Reds offered him a contract, Griffith raised Conn's salary, and Conn was forced to accept the better stipend for the sake of Mrs. Conn and the two little girls.

* * * *

Conn Given Raise

When the Brooklyn Dodgers sought to sign him last winter, Griffith met that offer, gave Conn a larger salary than he would draw from Brooklyn, and Conn stayed on again.

* * * *

Sometimes it isn't much fun pitching in batting practice. The hitters know what's coming, take strangle holds on their bats and swing from their heels just for the fun of it. Conn's very life is in his hands each time he unlooses a pitch.

G. W.'s Late Spurt Fails To Turn Tide

Crowd, Believed Record, Overflows Tech Gym; Score, 18-6, at Half.

Blackbirds Change to Short Attack, Have Throng Awed.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A sharpshooting Long Island University team that was expected to take everything but the referee's trousers just barely escaped with a 28-to-24 victory over George Washington's harried tossers last night at Tech High School before a record attendance of 4,000 spectators.

What is believed to be the largest crowd ever to attend a basketball game in this city actually filled every nook and cranny of the spacious gym and overflowed onto the floor. The doors were closed immediately after the initial tap-off, leaving at least 100 fans clamoring for admission in vain. Colonial athletic officials found it impossible to accommodate them. Several times during the game announcements over a public address system carried the score to those outside.

Attack Is Changed.

Reversing its policy of shooting from midcourt every time it came into possession of the ball, as it had done against Catholic University the night before, Long Island chose to work the ball in close for most of its points last night. The attack usually succeeded, but there were occasions when Kramer, Torgoff, et al, let go with long ones that spun through with unbelievable accuracy. The visitors' unerring markmanship had the huge crowd saucer-eyed with amazement and left the Colonials trailing far, far behind.

With Torgoff, Hillhouse and Kramer leading the way, Long Island helped itself to a 4-0 lead immediately after play started, and soon had stretched it to 12-4. It led at the intermission by an 18-6 margin, as the Colonials experienced hard luck with their shots, missing an unbelievable number. Even Tom O'Brien, the deadliest set shot in town, couldn't find the range. He was close, but not close enough.

G. W. Almost Catches Up.

The Blackbirds' play in the second half was mystifying, for after working the count to 24-13 they seemed content to rest on their laurels. But Goldfaden dropped a field goal and Kiesel converted a brace of charity tries before Torgoff made it 26, launching a rally that almost deadlocked the issue.

Faris, subbing for Berg, made a fancy shot from the side and O'Brien sank another field goal, making it 21 for the Colonials, before Norton converted a foul for Long Island. Goldfaden pocketed two free floors for G. W. and a few moments later just missed a field goal that would have brought his mates within two points of their guests. He took the ball away from Torgoff with a neat bit of defensive play, dribbled in and "stuck it up," but the fates were kind to Long Island. The sphere rolled across the rim, hesitated momentarily, and then fell back onto the playing court. That, apparently, was the blow that killed George Washington's hopes.

Philadelphia, Pa., March 3.—State College, Pa., Mar. 3.—A tall Penn State team, employing an effective zone defense, turned in a 34-24 victory over Georgetown here tonight in an Eastern Intercollegiate Conference game that saw the home team tighten its hold of third place.

It was the fourth victory in eight loop assignments for the Centre County dribblers. Paul Reichenbach, the rangy sophomore guard, the attack with 13 points, 2 more than Georgetown's Petroskey tallied.

Catching the Hoyas on an off night, the Nittany Lions wasted little time in assuming command of the situation. Ahead by 17 points in the early minutes, they led, 23-13, at half time.

Hockey Clubs Defy A. A. U., Organize New Ice Circuit

New York, March 3.—Formation of an International Amateur Hockey League to start operation next season was announced today after a conference at Madison Square Garden between officials of the Montreal Senior Amateur League and the U. S. Eastern League.

Action was taken as the result of the recent ruling of the Amateur Athletic Union, which declared the Baltimore Orioles of the Eastern circuit ineligible and threatened similar action against clubs playing the Orioles. The A. A. U. also terminated the agreement regarding transfer of players between the two countries.

The new league will have five members in the United States and seven in Canada, according to the plans announced by Phil E. M. Thompson, secretary of the Eastern League, and Tom Lockhart, manager of the New York Rovers.

All five teams in the Eastern League—Hershey, Atlantic City, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and the Rovers—will form the Southern group with Ottawa, Verdun, Quebec, Montreal Royals, McGill University, Montreal Victorias, Quebec Aces and Montreal Canadians making up the Northern section.

Meanwhile, the Amateur Athletic Union went ahead with its announced intention of refusing sanction for the Hershey track and field meet, March 12-13, if the hockey club goes through with its league game with the Orioles.

Dan Ferris, secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., said that the track meet and hockey team were under the same management despite reports to the contrary from the Middle Atlantic Association of the A. A. U., and management of the Hershey Sports Arena.

Gomez, Crosetti Sign 'Compromise' Terms

Yankee Hurler 'Just Got Sick of the Holdout Business,' Salaries Reported to be $12,000 For Pitcher, $13,000 for His Mate.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 3.—Pitcher Vernon (Lefty) Gomez, tired of seeing movies and working out in gymnasiums, and Shortstop Frankie Crosetti today quit the holdout ranks of the New York Yankees.

The Yankees did not announce the terms, but Col. Jacob Ruppert described the settlements as "compromises." Gomez had asked for $15,000 and was offered $12,000. Crosetti wanted $15,000 and was offered $13,000.

The signing of these two reduced the New York holdout list to five: Lou Gehrig, Bill Dickey, Red Ruffing, Joe Dimaggio and Red Rolfe.

"Just Got Sick."

As Gomez described it, he just got sick of the holdout business. While waiting for Col. Ruppert to meet his terms, Lefty spent his nights talking to Boy Scouts in upper New York, civic clubs in New Jersey and merchants in Brooklyn. He was even drafted to present prizes to outstanding oyster shuckers the other night. After all this he was easy for the colonel.

"Gomez told me he's going to win 25 games," Ruppert announced "and I hope he does. I like Gomez. He comes in and talks straight out. There's nothing back-handed about the boy."

Gehrig to California.

This was the fourth conference between Gomez and the Yankee owner. Ruppert paid Gomez $20,000 a year in 1935 and 1936. But in both these years Gomez' performance was disappointing and Ruppert this year offered him a $7,500 contract. In their first conference this was hiked to $10,000, in the second to $12,500 and, in the third Ruppert refused to meet Lefty's request for $15,000.

Crosetti was originally offered $10,000, the same as he got last year. This was boosted to $13,000, before Crosetti showed much interest.

Advised that No. 1 holdout, Lou Gehrig, had flown to California today, Col. Ruppert demurred faintly. "He might at least have let us know," Ruppert said.

Parker Wins In Title Tennis

By the United Press.

New York, March 3.—Play ran true to form in the quarter-final round of the men's national indoor tennis championships today with Frankie Parker, of Spring Lake, N. J., defeating Leonard Hartman, of New York, who was seeded No. 7.

Parker, America's No. 2 ranking player and seeded second in the indoor play, tunred in a straight set victory, 6-3, 6-1, 10-8, to become the odds-on favorite to succeed Gregory S. Mangin, of Newark, who was eliminated in the second round.

In the women's division Norma Taubele, New York, top-seeded star, eliminated Patsy Hiller, Berkeley Calif., 6-3, 6-1, to enter the semi-final round. Millicent Hirsh, seeded No. 3, New York, put out Minnie Fullen, New York, 6-2, 6-3.

Charlotte C. McNeill, unseeded Bound Brook, N. J., entry, upset the second seeded player, Florence Leboutillier, Westbury, Long Island, 6—4, 4—6, 8—6.

Bolton Asks $500 Before He Signs Up

Nat Catcher Demands Bonus Promised in 1936 Agreement.

Return of Myer Gives Harris Problem of Juggling Hitters.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 3.—Five hundred dollars tonight separated Clark Griffith, owner of the Nats, and Catcher Cliff Bolton from agreement on Bolton's 1937 contract.

The Nats' No. 1 catcher, who arrived in camp today from his High Point, N. C., home, has delayed signing a contract until Griffith meets his demands for an additional $500.

The sum represents money which Bolton declares is due him under his bonus arrangement with Griffith last season, when his contract called for an extra $500 if he caught the majority of the Nats' games.

Bolton figured in more than 100 of the club's games, but the bonus was withheld from him by Griffith when he quit the team without notice early in September.

Pointing out that he sacrificed a month's salary by leaving the team, Bolton told newspapermen tonight that he felt he earned his bonus money, notwithstanding his flight from the team.

The terms of his 1937 contract were satisfactory, Bolton said, except for the Washington club's failure to pay him his 1936 bonus. He will go into session with Griffith tomorrow in an attempt to collect.

Explaining that the pain of his sinus trouble forced him to quit the team last season despite Griffith's orders that he be treated by a Washington doctor, Bolton declared that the condition has been remedied by the extraction of several infected teeth.

Bucky Harris today began to give thought to a "delightful" problem—that of crowding another .300 hitter into his Washington batting order.

The return of Buddy Myer to the Washington infield after his virtual lay-off last season, has caused Harris to ponder how he can juggle his batting order to best advantage.

Ben Chapman, as a lead-off man last season, proved perhaps the most capable in the league, and Harris has no desire to disturb that order.

Buddy Lewis, as the second-place hitter, proved one of the cleverest bunters in baseball, and the timely hits contained in batting average that barely failed of .300 have convinced Harris that Lewis is the team's natural No. 2 hitter.

This place in the order was Buddy Myer's role when he won the league-batting championship in 1935, but in that spot last season Harris had the redoubtable Joe Kuhel with his .327 mark. The Nats' manager is in no mood to displace Kuhel.

Johnny Stone was the team's, fourth-place hitter in 1936 and justified that position by leading the club with his .341 average, but Stone may be deposed as the clean-up hitter.

Harris likes to envision Freddie Sington behind the lusty swing of a bat in the clean-up spot. He declared today that Sington is likely so start the season batting in fourth place.

"I want to make use of Sington's power," declared Harris. "He's the only real slugger on the club. Kuhel and Stone hit long balls, but neither can class with Sington when it comes to straightway slugging. That big fellow is a real powerhouse.

Ossie Bluege, taking his own good time about getting into uniform after lolling about here for a week, finally turned out for practice today. Bluege is permitted to train in his own way, in deference to his experience.

Dick Lanahan, the local boy who is still trying to make good with Washington, was the camp's first casualty, suffering a sprained ankle while fielding a bunt. But he continued in uniform.

Post Fight Forfeits.

A Snappy Turn in Coast Yacht Race

Paul Waner Balks At Buc Contract

National League Batting Leader Says Pirates Changed Terms of Agreement; Joins Dizzy Dean in Forming 'Holdout Club.'

Sarasota, Fla., March 3.—Paul "Big Poison" Waner, who led the National League in batting three times during the dozen years he patrolled right field for the Pirates, conferred with Dizzy Dean today and contracted a severe case of "holdout fever."

The Pirate slugger and the Cardinal prima donna emerged from the conference insisting, vehemently, they will reject contracts proffered them by their managers.

Waner, who agreed to terms with the Pirates in a telephone conversation a week ago, disclosed that the management shaved $500 off this figure when they sent him a contract for his signature.

"They wired me today they had two witnesses to our conversation and I'd have to sign," said Paul. "Now isn't that fine?"

"Well, I just sent that contract back unsigned. I got a $1,000 bonus for leading the National batters last year. And what do they do but take that off my contract this year. Now they want to put it back but chop off another $500.

"They can't get along without you, Paul," said Diz. "You hold out for what you want and you'll get it, just like I'll get mine."

The Cardinal ace has announced he'll quit baseball before he signs for less than $50,000. In the meantime, he has refused to leave his home at Bradenton near here to report to the Cardinal camp at Daytona Beach.

Waner explained it's not the $500 that's bothering him; it's "the principle of the thing."

"I don't mind the $500," said Big Poison, "but after what they've tried to do to me, they'll come to my terms or I won't sign."

Jimmy Foxx, slugging first sacker for the Boston Red Sox, who also is unsigned, sat silently by while the Holdout Club was organized.

St. Petersburg, Fla.—Wally Berger, the Boston Bees' slugging outfielder, arrived in camp today, 48 hours ahead of schedule. Harry Kahre, a 17-year-old St. Louis youth, surprised Manager Bill McKechnie with his batting and shortstop play.

Mexico City.—Philadelphia Athletics rookies will have their first inspection by Manager Connie Mack tomorrow when the American Leaguers resume their exhibition series with the Agraviana, a Mexican semipro outfit.

St. Petersburg, Fla.—Announcement of the signing of Pitcher Lefty Gomez and Infielder Frank Crosetti today shared interest with sore muscles in the New York Yankees' training camp.

Second Baseman Tony Lazzeri and Reserve Outfielder Myrril Hoag both stayed away from practice, still somewhat under the weather from the effects of the first day's workout.

Havana—Getting ready for tomorrow's fourth training camp exhibition start, the New York Giants squad split into two groups today and went through an intracamp "double-header." Two full regulation games were played.

Lakeland, Fla.—Hank Greenberg, Detroit Tiger first baseman who spent most of last season with a fractured wrist, defied any challengers for his old job today. Greenberg referred particularly to Rudy York, heavy-hitting rookie from Milwaukee.

Clearwater, Fla.—While Manager Burleigh Grimes worked out with his younger pitchers, the Brooklyn Dodgers' No. 1 hurler, Van Lingle Mungo, had another session today on the holdout situation, and later revealed only $500 separates him from a signed contract now.

Cincinnati—Manager Charley Dressen led the vanguard of his Cincinnati Reds toward Tampa, Fla., tonight. Eight players boarded a train here and a similar number will follow tomorrow.

New Orleans, La.—Roy Hughes, at third base with the Cleveland Indians, said today at spring training camp he is anxious to "feel at home" at the hot corner. Hughes has held down second base for two seasons with the Tribe.

Lou Signs to Star in Movies

Lou Gehrig, right, New York Yankee "iron man" and holdout, is shown with Sol Lesser, film producer, in Hollywood yesterday as he signed a contract to appear as "a hardy American pioneer" in a Western picture. Gehrig flew to Hollywood yesterday to take a screen test. "But no Tarzans!" Lou is said to have decided.

District National Guard Boxers Beat Baltimore

Before a small but enthusiastic crowd at Turner's Arena last night, the District National Guard boxing team won all but two of nine bouts in competition with a picked Baltimore aggregation.

Harry Sunderland, of Baltimore, won a close decision from Eddie Saugstad in perhaps the best bout of the night. Saugstad had a slight edge in the boxing, but two knockdowns lost him the fight.

145-pound class—Vince Bobovari (N.G.), won decision from Robert Robey. Roy Crombie (N.G.), won on first-round technical knockout from Carl Lehnsenn. Bob Mathias (N.G.), won decision from Irving Sattler. Steve Mamakos (N.G.), won on third-round technical knockout from Ed Connor.

Farrell Gets 67 as $3,000 Play Starts

Runner-up Sinks His Chip Shots Equally Well; Cooper Trails.

By the Associated Press.

Hollywood, Fla., March 3.—Johnny Revolta, of Evanston, Ill., wielding a charmed putter, led the field around the first 18 holes of the 72-hole $3,000 Hollywood open golf tournament today.

Both his outgoing 34 and his incoming 32 were two under par. His 66 was one stroke better than the score of Johnny Farrell, the home club pro.

Revolta rammed home a 20-foot putt for a deuce on the short second hole and seemed to gain confidence every time he hit the ball after that. He was over par only on the ninth, where a short chip cost him a five. He had 13 pars, four birdies and an eagle.

That came on the 479-yard, par-five 70, where he smacked a No. 3 iron shot 20 feet from the pin and holed the putt for a three.

Farrell's Chipper Good.

Farrell's chipper was as hot as Revolta's putter. The former national open champion went over par on the first hole but dropped putts for birdies on the third and fifth holes.

He sank his chip shots three times on the incoming nine for a 37, leaving his putter in his bag on the twelfth, fourteenth and seventeenth holes.

Four players were bracketed behind him at 68—Ray Mangrum, of Dayton, Ohio; Jack Patroni, of Shawnee, Pa.; Byron Nelson, of Reading, Pa., and E. J. Harrison, of Little Rock, Ark. The latter was playing the course for the first time.

The only others to crack par 70 were Horton Smith, of Chicago; Charles Gray, jr., of Montclair, N. J., and Dick Metz, of Chicago, at 69.

Cooper, Ghezzi Fail.

"Lighthorse Harry" Cooper, of Chicago, leading money winner so far this year, and Vic Ghezzi, of Deal, N. J., who won this tournament last year, were among 16 back in the ruck with 72's. Their company included such stars as Horton Smith, of Chicago; Danny Shute, of Boston, the P. G. A. king, and Ralph Guldahl, of St. Louis.

Gene Sarazen, Lawson Little and Jimmy Thomson, who had been expected to compete, did not show up.

Another 18-hole round will be played tomorrow and 36 holes Friday to determine distribution of the $3,000 purse.

Haynes Fight Ends In Disqualification

By the United Press.

New York, March 3.—Leroy (Howitzer) Haynes, Negro heavyweight from Philadelphia, was disqualified tonight in the seventh round of his scheduled 10-round bout with Eddie Blunt, hard-hitting New York Negro.

Referee Billy Cavanaugh stopped the listless affair after a minute and 17 seconds of the seventh because Haynes refused to make a fight of it.

Blunt, a 2-to-1 underdog in the betting, swarmed all over Haynes in the first round and showed his willingness to slug it out with the Philadelphian at every turn. Haynes, absorbing plenty of punishment, took to his heels, and refused to uncover.

Blunt weighed 216½; Haynes, 200.

D. & H., Naylor, Christian Church Fives Win in Post Tourney

Close Games Are Feature Of Evening

St. Martin's, Lone Stars Are Other Victors in First Round.

The Washington Post-A. A. U. tourney struck a new high last night. Three of the four games played at Huerich Gym were decided by less than 6 points. Delaware and Hudson swamped the Railroad Retirement five, 47-28; St. Martin's downed Little Tavern, 33-28, and the National City Christian Church squeezed out a 21-19 victory over the A. A. A. Terriers. In the 145-pound class, Naylor's Sea Food nosed out Pike's Confectionery, 25-23.

Max Defies Garden, Sails for Europe

Maxie Plays 'Hide and Seek' With Reporters, Process Servers and Women Admirers; Waves Good-by From Liner's Porthole.

New York, March 3.—Maxie Baer, unpredictable as a deck of cards, dodged the law, the press and a dock full of screaming women today and sailed for Europe under farcical circumstances.

The Madcap Mauler, threatened with a $50,000 suit because of his failure to go through with a Bob Pastor fight in Madison Square Garden March 19, has been sought by the Garden's process servers since yesterday afternoon.

Meanwhile, Baer's wife, his brother Buddy, Mrs. Ancil Hoffman, wife of Baer's manager, and the rest of the party had boarded the ship.

Reporters tramped the decks, even peeped in the lifeboats for the former champion. But Sydney Hulls, London matchmaker who plans to match Baer with the winner of the Ben Foord-Tommy Farr bout, insisted Baer was not on board.

"I think he's going to sail from Boston next Wednesday," Hulls insisted.

The reporters maintained the search. On the top deck, newsreel men were set to take Maxie's picture. But they were forced to crank their cameras without the great Baer.

"You'll be safe if you say Max sailed on the Berengaria," he smiled. Soon thereafter reporters were rushed ashore.

On the dock some 50 women had gathered. Paul Damski, another of Hulls' associates, gathered the scribes and promised to give them a glimpse of Baer as the boat pulled out.

Just as the gangplanks were being swung aloft, Damski gave Hulls the signal, and in an instant Baer's beaming face appeared at a porthole well down in the belly of the ship.

Just as quickly he disappeared. The women began screaming:

"We want Maxie! We want Maxie!

Never one to deny the women, Baer reappeared. He let the photographers flash him "for evidence," and everybody was happy except the forlorn summons servers.

Back at Madison Square Garden, and particularly in the office of James Joy Johnston, all was chaos.

"Baer boarded the ship through the freight entrance late last night," Johnston announced, "but we'll get him in England. We got attorneys everywhere. He can't run away from us."

Despite Johnston's opinion, however, it was generally conceded that the failure of the Garden to serve Baer with the summons postponed any definite action in the case until Baer returns to this country.

That rabbit ball comes back toward the pitcher's box like a rifle shot.

Once Cliff Bolton hit him in the knee with a line drive, and he was carried from the field. In Boston one day, Heinie Manush smacked Conn's foot with a line that actually tore his shoe from his foot, sent it spinning out to second base. His body in midseason is quilted with bruises.

* * * *

He wants to pitch in real games so badly, he's tempted to let that nice salary Washington pays him go and join a minor league team at less money. But he can't afford that. Down here in Orlando, he's itching to pitch in an exhibition game, but there is no encouragement from Harris or Griffith who have him tabbed as lacking a curve.

* * * *

"But they're wrong," Conn was telling me today. "I really have a curve. Nick Altrock taught me how to throw it last summer. I had some trouble gripping the ball. Broke my thumb boxing in high school, but Nick taught me a new grip. They're giving all these green kids a chance. I'd like to have one. I can outpitch these rookies, really I can! Sometimes I think it ain't fair."

So do I, Harold.

Men Past 40

Many men at 40, in perfect health, without an ache or pain, wonder why they aren't as strong and as vigorous as they were 5 or 10 years ago. Mental and physical fatigue is the cause in the majority of cases. Fortunately this condition can be helped by the use of a recently discovered hormone. This hormone stimulates the glandular system to greater activity—helps build up lowered vitality.

This hormone is now available, together with other valuable ingredients in Zo-ak Tablets (Blue Box for men—Orange Box for women) and are sold and recommended by Unity Drug Stores and all chains. Zo-ak is the formula of a well known American physician so you can take it with confidence. It contains no nux vomica (strychnine) or any other harmful drugs. A booklet called "For Men Who Want to Live," will be sent in a plain sealed envelope by Zo-ak Co., 56 W. 45th St. N. Y.

G. W. Frosh In Tourney Tilt Tonight

Colonials, in Defense of of A. A. U. Title, Play Silver Spring.

"College Night" marks the installment of The Post's A. A. U. Basketball Tournament tonight in the Heurich gym with teams from George Washington and Georgetown bombarding the baskets.

The G. W. Freshmen, defending unlimited champions, take the floor at 9 o'clock with the powerful Silver Spring (Md.) Merchants as the opposition. Despite a record of 15 victories in 16 starts and a lineup of former high school stars, Coach Otts Zahn of the Colonial Cubs, thinks his chances of winning again this year "are not quite as good" as they were last year.

A weak offensive in the classroom has removed Bob Nowaskey, Chick Hollidge and Buddy Shaner through ineligibility. The Freshmen record includes victories over Investigation by 3 ponts; WPA by 5, Rinaldi Tailors by 8, and Y. M. C. A. by 1 point. Tech High, George Washington and Washington-Lee High have been easy victims.

In addition to the Freshmen highlight, District WPA's strong contender meets some strong contention in the Jewish Community Center outfit at 8 p. m. Both are leading candidates to succeed the Freshmen if the latter happens to falter.

Coach Zahn, however, despite his weakened lineup will throw a bunch of boys into action decidedly strong in appearance. At the forwards he has two New Yorkers, George Garber, an All-City star, and Bill Gerberski, one of Brooklyn's foremost schoolboy aces of last year. At center, Joe Headstream, of Texas, looms ominously to the opposition, with Sid Karp, of New Jersey, and Mike Aaraon, a New Jersey All-State selection, at the guards.

The WPA game with J. C. C. finds the latter in is first appearance of the tourney, although it will be WPA's second. Commisisoner Allen's cagers trounced Congress Heights in their debut Monday. With Reds Scheible, Dopey Dean, Chick Hollidge, Bill Noonan, Ollie Tipton, Gay Edelin and Bobby Lucas shooting the leather, the District boys looked impressive indeed.

Race Meet Is Off.

Dallas, Tex., March 3 (AP).—Officials of the Texas and Pan American Exposition today annulled the spring horse racing meet at Fair Park and agreed to pay R. B. George, track operator, $42,500 to waive the meet.

Rosslyn Girls Win, Near Crown In Ladies' District Pin League

Galt Davis' champion Rosslyn girls made their way surely toward their second successive title in the Ladies' District League last night, widening their margin to eight games over the second place Lucky Strike team with a three-game victory over Highway Engineering. With but seven weeks of the schedule remaining, nothing short of a miracle can stop them.

Lucky Strike took an odd-game decision over National Beer. Arcadia, led by Evelyn Ream's 151 game and 369 set, humbled Convention Hall three games. The R. E. A. Cleaners and Swanee each gained the edge with their matches with Temple and Georgetown, respectively.

Albert Jenkins and his son, Louis, have been clipping the maples at a terrific pace in the Commercial League at Convention Hall. Pa Jenkins, rolling with Continental Baking Co., rolled a 179 game, and Lou, shooting for Bell Cab, chipped in a 412 set, to lead the individual feats last night.

Al Wright's 142 game and Norman Gotthardt's 359 set featured the individual efforts in the Bankers League. Team game and set laurels went to City with 574 and 1,633, respectively . . . Burt Hughes opened his set in the C. & P. Telephone League with a brilliant game of 166, compiled with the aid of three spares and a triple-header strike. He rolled 84 in his second attempt and finished the set with 85 . . . Comely Aline Gregg shot a 131 game, second high for the season in the Ladies' Lucky Strike League, enabling Bureau of Investigation to obtain its only victory over the pace-setting General Land Office team . . . The leading teams took a tailspin in the Eastern Star League, Washington Centennial humbling Joseph H. Milans three games and Unity bumping off the leading Mizpah team twice.

The two Dairy leagues, Southern and Chestnut Farms, will lock horns in a special five-game home and home match. The first block is scheduled for the Lucky Strike drives at 5:00 o'clock Saturday and the second block the following Saturday at the Convention Hall alleys.

Five Teams Join League.

Five teams were admitted to the United States Government Baseball League and the application of the sixth was received at a meeting last night.

The teams admitted are the F. B. I., Naval Air Station, District Commissioners, Treasury and Federal W. P. A. The Sixth Battalion Fleet Marine Reserves filed an application, which is expected to be accepted at the next meeting, March 18.

Katan to Face Cox in Arena Mat Feature

Riot Inciting Baxter in Semifinal; Meske and Piers Also on Card.

Mr. Joseph Cox, the rough gentleman from Kansas City, and Mr. John Katan, the equally rough gentleman from Canada, will indulge in the featured bit of rough house at the regular weekly meeting of the Joe Turner Throwing Circle at the Arena tonight.

Mr. Cox and Mr. Katan are scheduled to work to a one-fall finish, if the customers can live through it.

Both Mr. Cox and Mr. Katan come by their roughness naturally.

If the impending bout lives up to expectations, all sorts of carnage, mayhem and perhaps even some actual wrestling, will take place. Both Cox and Katan hold even the scanty rules and regulations of the wrestling game in supreme contempt. They also scorn to work on the mat, but prefer to do most of their brawling outside the ring, right out where the customers can get a close-up view.

Just to assure the fans of some real high, wide and unhandsome action, Promoter Turner has brought the roughest in the business together for the supporting bouts.

Laverne Baxter, the newest sensation, who practically tore the joint to pieces last week, will return in a scheduled 30-minute semifinal against Hank Barber.

Baxter, who can think up more mean things to do in the ring than any man who ever showed here before, usually does not confine his tearing to pieces to his opponents. Last week he not only ripped Referee Benny Bortnick's trousers practically into shreds, but added insult to injury by slapping Benjamin all over the ring, then sending him in a beautiful arc into the ringside seats with a well-placed dropkick.

Nick Campofreda, former Western Maryland athlete, will take on Henri Piers, the stolid and sturdy Dutchman, in a 30-minute preliminary.

Great-uncle Henry was a "stuffed shirt"
. . . he stuffed it himself

But modern man skips the 12-course dinners and heavy drinks of those days . . . prefers a lighter diet, and a light whiskey like IRISH AMERICAN

A GREAT FELLOW as well as a great-uncle . . . but maybe a trifle dull. For the old boy stuffed himself with rich foods and heavy drinks, and it didn't sharpen his intellect. In those days a man could live that way, for life was slow and easy.

Unlike Great-uncle Henry, modern man lives a keen, fast life. He dines sensibly . . . and prefers a light, mild whiskey that considers his welfare. For he knows he must make his own training rules, or find himself running behind in the competitive race.

That's why he instantly welcomed IRISH AMERICAN. Especially developed for modern tastes and modern living, IRISH AMERICAN combines round, robust pot still whiskey with a specially distilled straight whiskey. Through this happy union it achieves its own personality . . . which is so rapidly making it a favorite everywhere.

People are ordering IRISH AMERICAN by the case, for they have found it precisely the whiskey they want for entertaining in their homes. In clubs, in smart restaurants and bars, its popularity is great and growing greater. For IRISH AMERICAN is not only perfect as a straight drink—it has just the balance between distinctive flavor and self-effacing mildness to make a superb Manhattan, Old-Fashioned or highball.

This fine, light whiskey, that fits so smoothly into modern life and obeys the "training rules" so scrupulously, may now be had at most places where fine liquors are sold . . . and you will find its price surprisingly moderate. It's best to ask for WILLIAM JAMESON IRISH AMERICAN Brand by its full name.

Two Bob's Stretch Burst Takes Feature Handicap at Hialeah

Two Events Are Decided By Camera

Townsend's Good Luck Continues, Our Reigh Wins to Pay $23.

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., March 3.—Graded handicaps, a regular Wednesday feature on the Miami Jockey Club's schedule, were so evenly contested that the big crowd was kept in the throes of excitement and suspense here this afternoon. Shortly after the camera had shown Brush Hook a nose winner in the Class "B" event, another photo finish developed in the featured Grade "A" handicap. And, as is usually the case, Mrs. Emil Denemark emerged with the winner in the stout-hearted filly, Two Bob.

The daughter of The Porter received a rousing ride from Charlie Kurtsinger to catch the flying Ogden Phipps colorbearer, White Cockade, right on the wire. Mrs. J. D. Hertz's Our Reigh was a soundly beaten third, four lengths back. Blackbirder and Gyral, the only other starters, were badly outrun all the way.

The mile and a furlong headliner served to give a better line on Widener Challenge Cup hopefuls, all save Blackbirder being eligible for Saturday's mile and a quarter classic.

Two Bob, an even money favorite in the field of five, finished the nine furlongs in 1:49 flat under 112 pounds. The Denemark 4-year-old has been in the money in all of her races here.

White Cockade displayed a brand of speed that was missing in his recent outings. Hilton Dabson took the gelding into a long lead, then hunched up until forced to a drive. At one time the son of Diavolo held an eight lengths advantage. Two Bob shook off Our Reigh and set sail for White Cockade as the field turned for home, with the pacemaker's long lead slowly but surely diminishing. Kurtsinger still had daylight to make up after entering the last furlong but he had a game filly under him and got the most out of her in those last, straining strides.

The last "helpful" purse of the season, with proceeds of the seven special charity events to be divided was second on the card. The 7-year-old Miney Hyerson, $5.60 choice, scored by a length under Eddie Arcaro. Whooper held a similar margin over Lord Tournament for the place.

Social Welfare Costs Nation Five Billions

Increasing Costs May Bring Total to 7 Billions in Next Decade.

New York, March 3.—Governmental expenditures under the general heading of social welfare have increased 200 per cent since the World War and now aggregate $5,000,000,000, says The Index, of the New York Trust Co. today. This total, inclusive of expenditures by local governments as well as by the Federal Government, represented 36 per cent of the cost of all government in 1934 and 10 per cent of the national income. Increasing costs of the social security program, according to further estimates by the bank review, may bring this over-all total to $7,000,000,000 in the next ten years, or almost half governmental costs in 1934 and 14 per cent of the national income.

"Such expansion of social services is not peculiar to the United States," says The Index. "For Great Britain has a fully developed social security program, which has grown up gradually since the World War, including not only such accepted activities as education, poor relief, and general welfare work, but unemployment insurance, national health insurance and old age pensions. How far Great Britain has actually gone along this path is perhaps most graphically illustrated by the salient fact that approximately 13 per cent of the national income is expended in social services which constitute a permanent feature of governmental activity.

"The United States has embarked on a course which, as is already the case in Great Britain, will mean an increasingly heavy burden for the public. It involves the risk of heavy taxation which may seriously impair our national earning power unless it is carefully and conservatively formulated, on an equitable basis, along lines which represent the least possible interference with buying power, normal industrial expansion and business activity."

Wheat Tumbles With Rainfall In Southwest

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 3.—Late reports of rains Southwest and West promising benefit for crops led to wheat price setbacks today that more than offset earlier gains. The fact that wheat was up 6 cents a bushel since Thursday did much also to induce selling, especially on the part of recent buyers who were in a position to realize profits. From the day's top, $1.23 for Chicago May delivery of wheat, the market tumbled a full 2 cents.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ⅜ to ¾ under yesterday's finish, May, 1.33 to 1.33⅛; July, 1.14⅝ to 1.14¾, Sept., 1.11⅜ to 1.11½. Corn, ⅞ off to ½ up; May, 1.06⅝ to 1.06¾; July, 1.01¾ to 1.01⅞; Sept., 95½ to 95⅝; oats, ¾ to 1⅛ down; May, 45⅝ to 45¾; and rye showing ⅝ to ⅞ decline; May, 1.06. Provisions closed 5 to 15 cents higher.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Steel Stocks Advance Again in Heavy Trading; Bonds Unsteady; Wheat Lower.

New York, March 3.—Speculation in the stock market was spurred by the favorable labor developments in the steel industry, by the prospect of all around higher prices for finished goods, the flood of orders coming to industry in anticipation of the increases and the longer-term implications of inflation involved. Turnover in stocks was around 3,600,000 shares, the largest since November 5, although the million-share pace of the first hour could not be maintained. Leading stocks rose 1 to 7 points, final hour prices being near the best. Bonds were somewhat unsteady. May wheat closed half a cent lower at 133⅛ cents a bushel.

Trading in stocks from the opening showed that insufficient time had been had yesterday to appreciate the significance of the labor agreement in the steel industry. Mere relief over the news that the United States Steel Corporation, and consequently other leading steel makers, in all probability would be spared the expense and uncertainty of strikes, would have been enough to give the market at least a temporary fillip, just as was done in the General Motors settlement.

In the motors case the optimism aroused by the settlement was held in check by two considerations. For one thing, the advantage gained by the C. I. O. was feared to be only the beginning of attacks in other directions, and perhaps the forerunner either of a complete surrender of industry to the closed shop, and wage scales that might well break down the recovery or of a long period of industrial disputes, property damage and social unrest generally.

It now looks as though industry, for a year or so at least, will avoid conflict with labor on a large scale by paying the price of short hours and higher wages, which inevitably will lift production costs. That increase is to be promptly met, in the steel industry first by an advance in prices for finished products, and no doubt the users of steel will in turn attempt to pass on to the ultimate consumer the higher prices.

Puts and Calls.

Put and call sellers were fairly well prepared for the recent jump in the market, especially in United States Steel. The price is still 8 points down for a put and 10 points up for a call. One leading dealer, incidentally, sent around a price list on that basis on February 16. Steel closed that night at 105¾, so that the lucky buyer of a call already has a nice profit on virtually no risk. The return on the investment of $137.50 would, this morning, have been around $400. The quitation on Chrysler was the same, and it still is the same, but the price two weeks ago was around 132½, which would mean that this morning after paying for the call and the commissions, the call buyer would just about be even. General Motors is quoted 2 down and 3½ up, and General Electric is 1 and 2.

Freight Traffic.

The holiday last week cut into the advance of freight traffic which had reached a new high peak for the year in the previous seven days. The decline, which was less than seasonal, did not carry the total under the same week last year. The Sun's estimate for last week is 2.1 per cent under the previous seven days and 3.9 per cent above the same period in 1936.

Money Market.

The decision of a few banks to accept not less than one-half of 1 per cent for Federal funds, told in the Sun yesterday, withdrawing altogether from the Federal funds market, did not affect the rate for such surplus balances, which continued to be in supply at one-eighth of 1 per cent. Several of the larger banks besides those which have withdrawn feel that the current rate, amounting to $3.47 a day on $1,000,000, does not pay for the clerical work involved, but they are not anxious to rush an increase before normal conditions around May 1 automatically bring higher rates. Some of the banks which are quite frequently in the market for Federal funds think that if the rate should harden to around one-quarter of 1 per cent banks out of town would become "lenders" of Federal money.

Acceptances.

Some of the banks have refused to buy any more 30 or 60-day bills at current yields. Others have fixed definite dates ahead which are the limits of maturity of bills they will buy at the moment, reflecting general expectancy of higher money on May 1. Since there is still a good demand for acceptances, the market level has not yet been affected. The outlook is for some upward change in bill yield rates in a few weeks. Although on the face of things excess reserves are ample, five or six banks monopolize the surplus funds and the great unknown factor is the extent of country bank money withdrawals from Wall Street. Since the first of the month country banks have taken out nearly $40,000,000, but these withdrawals have not all been connected with higher reserve requirements.

Odd Lots.

New York Central led an invigorated rail market. The price is rapidly approaching the point at which the remainder of the convertible 6 per cent bonds, or most of them, might be taken care of, in which case the refunding issues might not need to be offered. Some traders doubtless think the stock will go higher just because it will be advantageous to the road to have the bonds converted. . . . Carrier Corporation has a contract to complete air conditioning of the national Capitol. Some are willing to lay bets it loses money on that job. . . . Stock Exchange membership bid and asked quotation is $99,000 @ $125,000. Last sale was $119,000. . . . Rumor says Stock Exchange floor clerks are planning a sit-down strike. Probably they are tired of seeking so many unused seats.

N. Y. Stock Values Rise $705,869,000

New York, March 3 (AP).—Value of shares listed on the New York Stock Exchange rose $705,869,000 during February to a total of $62,617,741,160 as of March 1, the exchange's monthly compilation revealed today. Aggregate value of listed shares on February 1 was $51,201,637,902.

Collateral borrowings of New York Stock Exchange members at close of February totaled $1,074,832,137, an increase of $48,460,047 over the loans reported as of January 31, the exchange announced today.

Floods, Labor Halt Industry For January

Recession Will Not Check Upward Trend, Survey Holds.

New York, March 3.—Industrial activity, on a seasonally adjusted basis, declined in January owing chiefly to conditions created by the floods and by labor disturbances in the automotive industry, according to the regular monthly survey of the National Industrial Conference Board. There is little evidence that this recession represents any important interruption in the upward trend of the recovery cycle.

Automobile output, textile activity, machine tool orders, bituminous coal production and most wholesale and retail trade indexes declined during January. Steel activity advanced by less than the usual seasonal amount. These recessions were offset to a considerable extent, however, by an outstanding gain in the construction industry, an advance in pig iron production, and increased output of electrical power and crude petroleum, which reached record high levels.

Automobile production in the United States and Canada, despite the General Motors strike, declined by only 4.4 per cent during January, after adjustment for the usual seasonal change.

Steel output was higher than for any January on record. While it did not show the usual seasonal expansion over December, 1936, it was still 54.5 per cent higher than a year ago.

The construction industry registered the most outstanding gain in the industrial field in January. Total building contracts in the 37 Eastern States amounted to $242,800,000. This was 21.6 per cent higher than awards reported in the preceding month.

Electric power output in January reached a new high level

Machine tool orders, which were the highest ever recorded in December, 1936, declined sharply in January. They were still, however, materially above average orders during the year 1929.

Cotton Consumption Offsets Export Drop

Boston, Mass., March 3.—While cotton exports for 1936 fell off 460,000 bales from 1935, this was offset by the increased consumption in United States mills last year, which jumped 1,500,000 bales over 1935.

Heavy Industries Lead Curb Rise

New York, March 3 (AP).—Heavy goods, specialty and manufacturing companies' stock today found stimulation in the seeming circumvention of a general strike threat in the steel industry and ran fractions to more than 7 points higher.

The advance was launched at the opening and continued virtually unchecked throughout the session. Pepperell Mfg. closed 7½ points higher at 140½, Ohio Brass was up 5½ at 65½; Threw Shovel, 2¼ at 67½; American Hard Rubber, 2⅝ at 27¾, and Gulf Oil, 2¼ at 60¼. Bell Aircraft, Hudson Bay Mining, Jones & Laughlin Steel, Alabama Great Southern and Newmont Mining were other gainers.

On the offside—fractionally so for the most part—were a number of utility shares including United Gas, Electric Bond & Share and American Light & Traction. American Gas & Electric lost 1 at 39⅛. Tech-Hughes, Pantepec Oil and Pan American Airways were other slight losers.

Steel Prices Unchanged.

Building Sets 7-Year High For February

Private Awards More Than Double Total a Year Ago.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 3.—Expansion of private building lifted the February total of engineering construction awards to the highest for the month since 1930, the Engineering News-Record announced today. The trade publication put total awards at $189,187,000, compared with $173,077,000 in January and $164,499,000 in February, 1936.

Private projects rose to $103,745,000 compared with $42,287,000 in the same month last year. Public awards declined to $85,452,000 from $122,221,000 in the 1936 month. The Federal total was $7,444,000 against $9,872,000 in February last year.

The weekly average, at $47,229,000, increased 9 per cent over January. A major contribution was the extension of the Pennsylvania Railroad's electrification program. Commercial building jumped 33 per cent. Compared with February last year, the weekly average of commercial building more than doubled. Figures for streets and roads, public buildings and similar projects were lower.

Charlottesville Dentist Admits Chloroform Slaying of Girl, 18

eral hours. He made several conflicting statements. However, he made no confession."

The dentist was fingerprinted when he was arrested.

Dr. Miller is stocky, wears glasses and is partly bald. He took a prominent part in civic affairs of the town.

Wife Sings in Choir.

Mrs. Miller, the former Mozelle Williams, of Roanoke, is a choir singer in a local Methodist church. They have two children, Lucy, a student at the University of Virginia, and Richard, jr.

The dentist was born in Mathews County in Tidewater Virginia. He was graduated from Baltimore Medical College with a dental degree and came to Charlottesville to practice in 1909.

Officers who took the suspect to Henrico County Jail at Richmond were Sheriff Smith, Deputy Sheriff Herbert Haney and J. E. Adams and B. A. Shipp, both plain-clothes men of this town's police force.

The chloroform can found with the girl's body was sent to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for examination for fingerprints.

Girl Reported Pregnant.

In an extra edition tonight the Charlottesville Daily Progress said: "The Sprouse girl, according to a report, was pregnant at the time of her death. This alleged circumstance is attributed by officials as the motive for her alleged murder."

When asked about this report, Fife said, "I decline to answer."

One important disclosure brought about Dr. Miller's arrest after his name had been linked all day in rumor and gossip with the murder. That was information given investigators that the 48-year-old dentist had purchased a can of chloroform Monday shortly before Miss Sprouse disappeared.

Earlier, Dr. Miller had volunteered to police the information that a can of chloroform that vanished from his office 10 days ago was similar to that which was balanced on the girl's forehead when her body was found Tuesday morning along flirtation lane, a secluded, wooded section adjoining the university cemetery.

Dr. Miller was detained under circumstances as dramatic as anything ever conceived by a movie scenarist. The dentist was filling a patient's tooth when Detective Shipp called to take him to headquarters. Detective Shipp waited until the patient left. Then he walked into the office and told Dr. Miller he was wanted for questioning.

The dentist was paraded to police headquarters last night through hundreds of curious citizens who lined the six blocks between his office and the station.

An important development in the slaying is information given authorities yesterday by Ethel Sealbrook, 18, companion of the slain girl, who has been revealed as the last person known to have seen her alive. Ethel told Deputy Sheriff H. C. Haney:

"It was between 7 and 8 o'clock Monday night when I saw Cleo last. I heard an automobile horn blow outside my house and I went out on the porch.

"At the curb was a big, reddish-brown sedan. There was a man driving, but in the dark I could not tell who he was.

"Cleo was sitting beside him in the front seat, and she called out to me, asking if I could go for a ride with them. I told her I already had a date, so they drove off. I couldn't tell who the man driving was."

The name of Dr. Miller was brought into the slaying probe early yesterday when he told police a can of chloroform disappeared from his dental office February 19, when Cleo called on him.

Dr. Miller, according to investigators, treated the slain girl at his office on the afternoon of her disappearance.

Dr. Miller said a can of chloroform similar to the one found on Cleo's body was missing from his office after he treated the girl February 19.

Dr. Miller said he had stepped out of his office for a moment, leaving Cleo in the chair. He returned, he said, to see his patient closing the door of the cabinet where the chloroform was kept.

Not Used as Anesthetic.

Dr. Miller declared he kept the chloroform on hand for use as a solvent in making fillings and "never administered it as an anesthetic."

After an examination of the can found on the slain girl, Dr. Miller said the trade mark and size corresponded with the can missing from his office.

Dr. Miller said the day Miss Sprouse disappeared (Monday), she called at his office to make an appointment with him for her brother, Chris. An hour later, Dr. Miller said he saw the girl walking in a park.

She had a bundle under her arm, he said, and waved to him. The dentist said he called to the girl:

"Are you waiting for him?"

"She waved goodbye, but said nothing," the dentist told police.

"I am convinced the girl didn't commit suicide," Dr. Miller later told newspaper reporters. "She was looking forward to being married and also it would have been practically impossible to take one's life under the conditions in which she was found."

Meanwhile, the body of the auburn-haired girl lay in an open casket at the Hill-Irving Funeral Home, where scores of her schoolmates from Lane High School visited yesterday afternoon. It will be removed to the frame house she occupied with her mother, brother and two sisters for funeral services at 3 p. m. today.

The tragedy was discovered Tuesday by two engineering students of the university who had gone to the cemetery to visit the grave of a friend killed in an automobile accident last week.

They found the girl lying, head downhill, on the outside of the wall separating the cemetery from the university golf course. The face was covered by a small white towel. Balanced on her chin was the chloroform can, apparently so arranged as to saturate the cotton in her nose and mouth.

The fact that a portion of her underclothing had been removed led authorities at first to suspect she had been the victim of an attack, but an autopsy Tuesday revealed she had not been assaulted.

Gen. Hoskins Dies; Was Retired in 1908

Brig. Gen. John D. C. Hoskins, retired, died Tuesday at Germantown, Pa., according to the War Department. The 91-year-old former inspector general had served several tours of duty in Washington.

Born in 1846 in Missouri he was appointed to West Point by President Lincoln at the request of Gen. U. S. Grant. Graduated in 1868, he was one of the Academy's oldest graduates. He was promoted through the various grades, becoming a lieutenant colonel in 1906, a full colonel a year later. He was retired as a brigadier general in 1908 at his own request, after more than 40 years of service.

His tours of duty in Washington included from 1881 with the Third Artillery, from 1892 to 1893 in garrison at the Washington Barracks, and as inspector general from 1904 to 1905.

He is survived by his wife and a daughter, the wife of Col. Julius T. Conrad, retired, 1616 Twenty-first street northwest. Burial will be in the family plot near New Rochelle, N. Y.

Congressional Job Advice Advocated

Taking a point of view diametrically opposed to that of a colleague, Representative Hendricks (Democrat), of Florida, yesterday proposed that the Civil Service Commission call upon members of Congress for recommendations whenever a vacancy occurs in the field service in his district.

Only a week ago Representative Maas (Republican), of Minnesota, introduced a bill to make it a crime punishable by fine or imprisonment for Congressmen to recommend a person for appointment or promotion in the civil service.

Hendricks' bill seeks to amend the civil service act of 1887.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the Department of Agriculture Orchestra Wednesday night in the South Building with Dr. Walter Bauer conducting and Leslie Atkins as violoncello soloist.

Program: Overture to "Ruy Blas" (Mendelssohn), "Kol Nidrei" (Bruch), "Keltic Legend" (Laureuce Powell), "Pastorale d'Ete" (Honegger), Sinfonietta (Chadwick).

On those occasions when the Department of Agriculture Orchestra holds open house, the guests are not reluctant in attending, and last evening's audience filled the hall as usual. There is always the certainty that Dr. Walter Bauer will have placed on the program one or more compositions not ordinarily encountered at concerts, and that in itself is an inducement for those with a curiosity about music.

Performances polished to the last shining phrase are not what one expects from this body of amateur musicians whose rehearsals are voluntary labors. They meet for the enjoyment of studying scores together, and have not the time for the perfection of every detail. One must listen to them in the same spirit of real amateurism, with the fault-finding lobe of the brain inactive.

For the opening number Dr. Bauer revived Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" overture which was a favorite with the public so long ago that it now sounds fresh again. The overture is an epitome of the cloak and sword drama which it prefaced, abounding in horn calls, the susurration of conspiracy, and the agitation of romantic deeds.

Laurence Powell's "Keltic Legend," receiving a performance from manuscript, proved an attractive work with a content which the title conveys. Part of the music broods in a mystic poesy, and part of it shouts in a warfare of clans. Mr. Powell has a good melodic imagination and scores with an accurate sense of tone colors.

Those who know Arthur Honegger only by "Pacific 231" or "Rugby" would scarcely recognize his idiom in the "Summer Pastoral." In place of strenuous motion and clangor, this piece offers the lassitude of a July day, the lazy fancies that come and go while one lies in the shade of a tree.

The sinfonietta by the late George Whitfield Chadwick is a challenge to the casual theory that the music of the New England school is academic. It sparkles with animation and with humor, and has a pulsating vitality. There is not a dry passage in the four movements, thanks to the clever instrumentation and the continuous zest of the writing.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Some uninformed players have the quaint idea that through "brilliant" interference bidding they can disrupt the effectiveness of asking bids. In the finals of a recent team-of-four tournament, the fallacy of this theory was proved when on two different hands the enemy attempted to interfere with the responses to the asking bids used by the Culbertson team. In the one case, since the responder actually was prepared to make a positive response, he simply ignored the opponent and swept on to his laydown slam. The other case was the hand shown below.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♣	5 ♣	Pass	Pass
Double	Pass	Pass	Pass

When South received even mild encouragement in the form of North's two-spade bid, he properly took on slam aspirations—hence the four club asking bid. West arbitrarily decided that the enemy was well on its way to a "laydown slam," and had the brilliant inspiration to interfere with North's probable answer by an overall in the club suit itself. The absurdity of this maneuver should have been manifest. Had North held a conventional positive response in the form of second-round club control and an Ace, or first-round club control, he would have ignored the five club bid and swept on to his slam. Since, however, he would have signed off to the four club asking bid with four spades, he now merely passed. When the bidding returned to South, the situation was quite clear. A slam was remote, since North had denied the possession of second-round control and the Ace of diamonds. Since neither team was vulnerable, South was certain that he could defeat five clubs more than a game would be worth. His judgment and the effectiveness of the asking bid system were upheld by the fact that West proceeded to go down 700 points, which was a clear profit to North and South of 150 points over the value of the five spade contract, which was the limit they could make.
